QUESTIONS PRESENTED

The Age Discrimination in Employment Act 29 U.S.C. § 623(d) expressly prohibits retaliation in employment resulting from an individual opposing any practice made unlawful by the Act because that individual ". . . testified, assisted, or participated in any manner in an investigation, proceeding, or litigation under this chapter." The Petitioner, David Tinkle, testified and participated in a lawsuit brought by a co-worker against the Respondent/Employer. First, Tinkle rejected the request of the Respondent/Employer to confer with its attorney regarding the co-worker's lawsuit. Second, Tinkle later testified and provided direct evidence of age discrimination against the Respondent/Employer. Within a month after his initial participation, his supervisor began to subject him to a sundry of adverse employment actions, the last of which was abusive and culminated in his termination.

The questions presented are whether:

1. Whether under the "tangible action" analysis of Ellerth, the action taken by Tinkle's supervisor suffices for the "adverse employment action" prong in a retaliation claim; and,

2. In following the principles directed in Reeves, whether Tinkle's evidence was sufficient to survive judgment as a matter of law by establishing a "prima facie case," as that term is used in McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Greene, 411 U.S. 792, 802 (1973); and second, by the production of evidence from which a rational factfinder could conclude that the employer's proffered explanation for its actions was false; and,

3. Whether the lower court's erroneous application of the incorrect legal standard influenced the ultimate conclusion that Tinkled failed to prove an "adverse employment action" occurred.

Appendix B — Order Of The United States District Court For The Western District Of Oklahoma Dated And Filed July 17, 2000 ..... 6a

Petitioner respectfully petitions for a writ of certiorari to review the judgement of the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit in this case.

OPINIONS BELOW

The district court's opinion (per Magistrate Judge Gary M. Purcell) granting respondent's motion for summary judgment (Appendix (Pet. App. "B")) is found at Pet. App. "B" at p. 6a and is not published. The court of appeals' Order and Judgment (per Ebel, Porfilio and Kelly) affirming the grant of summary judgment (Pet. App. "A") is found at Pet. App. "A" at 1a and is not published.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The court of appeals entered its opinion and order on June 29, 2001. Petitioner invokes this Court's jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

STATUTORY PROVISION INVOLVED

The provisions of 29 U.S.C. § 623(d) relevant to this petition provide:

> (d) Opposition to unlawful practices; participation in investigations, proceedings, or litigation
> It shall be unlawful for an employer to discriminate against any of his employees or applicants for employment, for an employment agency to discriminate against any individual, or for a labor organization to discriminate against any member thereof or applicant for membership, because such > individual, member or applicant for membership has opposed any practice made unlawful by this section, or because such individual, member or applicant for membership has made a charge, testified, assisted, or participated in any manner in an investigation, proceeding, or litigation under this chapter.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

The Petitioner, David R. Tinkle (hereinafter referred to as "Tinkle" or "Plaintiff") was employed by Oklahoma Gas and Electric (hereinafter "OG&E" or "Employer") for twenty (20) years at the time of his termination. He was a witness against OG&E in an age discrimination law suit brought by a fellow co-worker. After he participated in the "protected activity" lawsuit, immediately thereafter he experienced a battery of adverse employment actions. His normal, daily duties were driving a heavy hauling truck. Over the years he suffered numerous job related back and neck injuries — the last, a re-aggravation of a neck injury, occurred in August, 1997, when he was forced to drive a 75 Ton Road Crane 80 miles.[1] The truck that he was assigned to operate was not equipped with "air-ride-suspension" and thereby presented a rough ride. Whereas, the trucks equipped with "air-ride-suspension" presented a relatively smooth ride. OG&E had in its inventory "air-ride-suspension" trucks which Tinkle requested to be assigned and he was denied. Instead of assigning him to a truck equipped with "air-ride-suspension", OG&E intentionally subjected him to physical harm and reprisal action by ordering him to drive a 75 Ton Road Crane approximately 80 miles. The District Court disregarded evidence in support of Tinkle's claim of retaliation (evidence disregarded that appear on the face of the record will hereinafter be referred to as "Disreg'd"). Both lower courts failed to apply proper "standards" in ruling on Summary Judgment. A summary of some of the events leading to the filing of this writ of certiorari are as follows:

1. Shortly before undergoing neck surgery in March 1997, Petitioner, David R. Tinkle (hereinafter "Tinkle") had been scheduled for deposition as a witness for Don Riffel in Riffel v. OG&E, No 97-6304 (10th Cir. 1997), D.C. No. CIV-96-1179-A, Western District of Oklahoma. However, due to Tinkle's health, (a neck injury) the deposition was continued until June 6, 1997. Pet. App. "B" at 13a Prior to his neck surgery, Tinkle received a call from OG&E's attorney who requested that he meet with her to discuss the Riffel case, and Tinkle responded by stating: "I am not interested", and he hung up the phone. (Disreg'd).

2. Tinkle returned to duty following his neck surgery on April 28, 1997. Because of his surgery, he requested that he be reassigned to drive a truck equipped with "air-ride-suspension", which would have minimized the bumpy, rough ride that is peculiar to the standard truck to which he was assigned. Notwithstanding the availability of the requested vehicle, John Singleton, Tinkle's supervisor, denied his request. The record indicates that after he refused to meet with OG&E's attorney regarding the Riffel age discrimination case, he noticed a change in Singleton's attitude toward him. Pet. App. "B" at 14a, 15a, 31a, 32a.

3. Tinkle testified via deposition on June 6, 1997, in opposition to OG&E in an age discrimination case, Riffel, Id. Riffel maintained that John Singleton, his supervisor, was the alleged discriminating official and that he was terminated on the basis of age.[2] Tinkle testified that Riffel had often been referred to by "management" as "the old man" and specifically had been referred to as "the old man" by John Singleton. Tinkle testified that a few days after Singleton fired Riffel, he heard Singleton, at a company meeting say, referring to Riffel, "I'm not going to back that old man." Tinkle also indicated that, on that same occasion, Singleton said: "if it had been anybody else, I would have gone to bat for him. You know how old men are, they are — they aren't going to change." The circuit court, in reversing the decision of the district court in Riffel, found that Tinkle's testimony that Singleton indicated he would have "gone to bat" for Riffel, but for the latter's age, amounted to direct evidence in support of Riffel's age discrimination claim and that the same precluded summary judgment for OG&E. Pet. App. "B" at 8a, 9a, 12a.

4. After giving his deposition in June, 1997, Tinkle noticed that John Singleton was intensifying the harassment. Pet. App. "B" at 31a. Tinkle was not accorded the time to do his "paper work" in the mornings and the tone of Singleton's voice changed to that of anger when he spoke to Tinkle. (Disreg'd).

5. In August 1997, Tinkle was ordered by Singleton to drive the 75 Ton Road Crane from Ardmore, Oklahoma to Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, which is a distance of approximately 80 miles. Tinkle had not been assigned to crane duties and responsibilities. In fact, in over 20 years of service with OG&E, Tinkle had driven the 75 Ton Road Crane on only one (1) prior occasion. Driving the 75 Ton Road Crane is extremely uncomfortable, and presents a very bumpy and rough ride. Notwithstanding the fact that Singleton knew of Tinkle's neck problems and that he was still seeing his doctor regarding his neck surgery, he ordered and insisted that Tinkle drive the crane. At the time, Singleton had the regular assigned drivers ready and available to drive the 75 Ton Crane. Pet. App. "B" at 16a-18a, 35a.

2. Singleton supervised both Tinkle and Riffel.

6. Because the 75 Ton Road Crane had a small cabin frame, and the fact that Tinkle's body size was too large to be safely housed in the cabin, his head was constantly being jammed into the roof of the cabin as he drove. (Disreg'd). On one such jam or projection, his head was rammed into the roof of the cab with such force that resulted in further injury to his neck. Tinkle reported his neck injury to his supervisor, Singleton. Singleton took Tinkle to the office of the OG&E's doctor, but changed his mind after arriving at the doctor's office and did not allow Tinkle to see the doctor. Instead, Singleton told Tinkle that he was being placed on "light duty"— only to change his mind again, and advised Tinkle that there was not any "light duty" available and sent Tinkle home. Pet. App. "B" at 13a, 15a, 23a.

7. OG&E had in practice a policy of accommodating employees who had been injured on the job. Some of these employees were carried for years in a "light duty" capacity. Pet. App. "B" at 16a.

8. Tinkle was given "light duty" restrictions by his doctor for only a two week period, and could have returned to work in September, 1997, but Singleton refused to allow him to return for reason that Tinkle could not drive the 75 Ton Road Crane — a fact that Singleton knew or should have know long before he ordered him to drive the crane. Pet. App. "B" at 19a.

9. Tinkle was then illegally placed on short term/long term disability.[3] Thereafter, the long term disability insurance coverage was terminated and Tinkle was not reinstated by OG&E. (Disreg'd) and Pet. App. "B" at 18a.

10. Tinkle has no formal education and relied upon OG&E for guidance in administrative matters such as his worker's compensation claim which Singleton advised

3. Tinkle's doctor had restricted him to "light duty" for two (2) weeks. In order to be placed on "short-term disability", the employee must be disabled far in excess of two weeks. Singleton, rather than allow Tinkle to return to work in a "light duty" capacity (several employees testified via affidavit that "light duty" was routinely given to any one who was injured on the job, and they identified various jobs that were available that Tinkle could have performed), he conditioned Tinkle's return on being able to drive the 75 Ton Road Crane — a substantial change in the "terms and conditions" of his job, as he had only driven the crane one (1) time in a twenty-year period. Singleton intentionally kept Tinkle away for a period sufficient for "short-term" disability to "kick-in", and when that expired, the "long-term" disability started. When the "long-term" disability began, Tinkle was still working the part-time job that he had been working for many years prior to 1997. Singleton knew of Tinkles part time job at all relevant times. The "long-term" insurance carrier investigated Tinkle's ability to work, and took pictures of him working at the part-time job and his "long-term" benefits were not extended for reason that he was not totally disabled.

him to not file a claim. (Disreg'd). Singleton told Tinkle that he was getting old and could not perform the job and that he needed to find another job where he would not be "bouncing in the truck". Had Singleton not assigned him to drive the 75 Ton Road Crane, he would not have injured his neck. Further, his career could have been greatly extended by assigning him to a truck equipped with air-ride-suspension (these vehicles were available). Pet. App. "B" at 19a, 20a.

11. The District Court granted summary judgment on July 17, 2000, holding, inter alia, that Tinkle failed to "allege who denied him a 'light duty assignment' or when this action occurred. It is not disputed that other members of Plaintiff's heavy equipment operator work group had previously been temporarily placed on light duty following various injuries . . ." The district court further rationalized with regard to the retaliation claim that Tinkle "failed" to allege when the "denial" occurred or who participated in this adverse action. Pet. App. "B" at 16a, 35a.

12. Notice of appeal was timely filed to the Tenth Circuit, and thereafter the decision of the District Court was affirmed on June 29, 2001. The Tenth Circuit held: ". . . His allegations that Singleton refused plaintiff's requested truck assignment or assigned him to drive the crane do not rise to the level of an adverse employment action". Pet. App. "A" at 3a, 4a.

13. This Petition for a writ of certiorari followed.

REASON FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

The directions provided by this Honorable Court in Burlington Industries v. Ellerth, 524 U.S. 742, 118 S. Ct. 2268 (1998); Faragher v. City of Boca Raton, 524 U.S. 775, 118 S. Ct. 2275 (1998); Harris v. Fork Lift Systems, Inc., 510 U.S. 17 (1993); Oncale v. Sundowner Offshore Services, Inc., 523 U.S. 75 (1998); and, Reeves v. Sanderson Plumbing Products, Inc., 530 U.S. 133 (2000), have been so far departed from by the lower courts that this Court's attention is compelling. In Ellerth this Court addressed "tangible employment actions" as being actionable. This Court also addressed non-tangible employment actions as being actionable when the same rises to the level of being "hostile" or "abusive." In Faragher at 807 this Court applied the same standard as in Ellerth, holding an employer liable to a victimized employee for hostile environment. As a result of the directions in Faragher and Ellerth, the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, supra, published and disseminated guidance in evaluating and defining what constitutes "tangible and non-tangible employment actions" by supervisors. The lower courts' decisions in the case at bar mirrors pre-Faragher and Ellerth misapplications of employment standards with which this Court was confronted and subsequently decided in the aforementioned two cases. Certainly, the EEOC guidelines published as a result of the aforementioned two cases are now in conflict with the decisions of the lower courts.

The lower courts' misapplication of the standard in Ellerth and Reeves appears on the face of both decisions. The lower court rulings are also in conflict with the substantive issues raised in Harris and Oncale which are specifically addressed herein.

The petition should be granted for three reasons:

First, the lower courts disregarded and failed to consider evidence supported plaintiff's claim of retaliation. This Court clearly expressed in Ellerth that a "tangible employment action", "constitutes a change in the terms and conditions of employment that is actionable under Title VII." Id. at 753-754. The action by Singleton "culminated" in the "tangible employment action" — termination. The lower courts erroneously failed to consider the reasonable "circumstances" relevant to the job assignment; but instead, considered only the "nomenclature" of the job assignment, rather then the foreseeable danger and harm of the assignment as perceived by Tinkle, and as a reasonable factfinder could perceive as "abusive". This erroneous misapplication voided any consideration of "severe" and "pervasive" job terms and condition, thereby eliminating any appropriate investigation or inquiry into the existence or non-existence of "tangible employment actions/adverse employment actions". This line of illogical deduction conflicts with this Courts direction in Ellerth as referenced above, and fatally jars the foundation of Reeves at 150, Oncale at 81, and Harris's at 23 — all standing, at a minimum, on the principle of an examination of the complete record in determining the applicability of Title VII. Again, this "misapplication" of Ellereth and the cited companion cases resulted in summary disposition of Tinkle's retaliation claim. Even if the lower courts were correct in applying the proper standard — to which position Petitioner opposes — the evidence at a minimum is sufficient to establish "abusiveness" which "culminated" in Tinkle's termination. Ellerth at 766 remanded to allow plaintiff to amend and for defendant to raise affirmative defenses, if any.

In dismissing Tinkle's claim, the Tenth Circuit held:

> His allegations that Singleton refused plaintiff's requested truck assignment or assigned him to drive the crane do not rise to the level of an adverse employment action. See id at 532 (explaining that "mere inconvenience or an alteration of job responsibilities" does not constitute "adverse employment action," which requires a "significant change in employment status".

The lower courts, given the totality of circumstances, failed to consider Tinkle's perception of fear of re-injury to his neck.[4] Certainly, a like "perception" and fear by Breakbill, Tinkle's co-worker, must be weighed as reasonable and in favor of Tinkle — the "nonmoving party". The evidence in the record shows that Tinkle "begged" Singleton to not force him to drive the crane for reason that he was still having problems with his neck and that he was still seeing his doctor for this physical problem. Considering the fact that the co-worker (Breakbill), whose normal job assignment was driving the crane, offered to drive the crane for fear of Tinkle being re-injured is evidence of "severe" and "pervasive" acts in support of an "abusive" environment, which

4. Oncale at 81 provides:

> . . . objective severity of harassment should be judged from the perspective of a reasonable person in the plaintiff's position, considering "all the circumstances" . . . Common sense, and an appropriate sensitivity to social context, will enable courts and juries to distinguish between simple teasing . . . and conduct which a reasonable person in the plaintiff's position would find severely hostile or abusive.

neither court below considered.[5] The perception that Tinkle had, as well as that of the co-worker, became a reality — Tinkle sustained a serious re-injury to his neck, which "culminated" in his termination. Surely, a reasonable factfinder could find that the proffered reasons of the Employer to be false. Ellerth at 754 "severe and pervasive" conduct of supervisor; Reeves at 143 quoting Texas Department of Community Affairs v. Burdine, 450 U.S. 248, 256 (1981). This extreme departure from accepted and usual course of judicial proceedings calls for an exercise of this Court's supervisory power.

Second, the thirty-one page final order of the district court is saturated with "credibility determinations and the weighing of evidence" — even to the point of improperly considering evidence that a jury would not be required to see or believe, such as investigatory or inquiry type letters from plaintiff's counsel to the insurance carrier regarding long term disability benefit of plaintiff.[6] The lower courts failed to give favorable inference to evidence supporting plaintiff's claim of retaliation, both courts failed to follow the standard set by this Court for deciding summary judgments. Reeves at 150-151:

> "Credibility determinations, the weighing of the evidence, and the drawing of legitimate inferences

5. Oncal, id. See also Reeves at 149 holding: "It suffices to say that, because a prima facie case and sufficient evidence to reject the employer's explanation may permit a finding of liability, the Court of Appeals erred in proceeding from the premise that a plaintiff must always introduce additional, independent evidence of discrimination"

6. Reeves at 151: "Thus, although the court should review the record as a whole, it must disregard all evidence favorable to the moving party that the jury is not required to believe"

> from the facts are jury functions, not those of a judge." Liberty Lobby, Inc., supra, at 255. Thus, although the court should review the record as a whole, it must disregard all evidence favorable to the moving party that the jury is not required to believe. See Wright & Miller 299. That is, the court should give credence to the evidence favoring the nonmovant as well as that "evidence supporting the moving party that is uncontradicted and unimpeached, at least to the extent that that evidence comes from disinterested witnesses."

It is undisputed that Tinkle enjoyed a complaint free employment environment prior to his participation in the Riffel case. From the time he rejected the request from OG&E's attorney to confer with her regarding Riffel, until he was terminated, Tinkle experienced a variety of adverse employment actions, which compelled "credibility determinations, the weighing of the evidence, and the drawing of legitimate inferences . . ."[7]

7. The District Court erroneously misstates the time and substance of plaintiff's claim by stating: "These allegations involve actions taken more than two years after the alleged statements by Singleton . . ." (Pet. App. "B" at 14a). The evidence shows: (1) approximately around March, 1997, plaintiff was scheduled to testify via deposition in the Riffel case; (2) plaintiff rejected his employer's (call placed by attorney for OG&E to Tinkle) request to visit with its attorney to discuss the Riffel case; (3) in March, 1997, plaintiff underwent surgery on his neck; (4) plaintiff returned to work after his surgery on April 27, 1997; (5) plaintiff immediately detected a difference in treatment by his supervisor, to wit: not being afforded time to do his paper work in the morning; voice was that of anger any time he communicated with plaintiff; scrutinized work more closely; refused plaintiff's request to be assigned to an

Reeves, id. at 155. The lower courts' failure to follow the precedent of a unanimous court in Reeves is indeed baffling, as very little is left for one to misunderstand. Ergo, the decision below must be sternly addressed to correct any further drastic departures from this Court's directions, and to guard against weakening the newly published guidelines by EEOC. Further, misapplications of the evidentiary burden of plaintiffs who attempt to prove intentional discrimination through indirect evidence will be thwarted. EEOC "NOTICE NO. 915.002" supra and Reeves, 530 U.S. at 134.

Third, the Tenth Circuit's misapplication of the elements necessary in the case at bar to establish a retaliation claim evidences signs of pre-Harris.[8] The court of appeals erroneously "air-ride-suspension truck, inter alia; (6) plaintiff testified in the Riffel case on June 6, 1997, and his testimony amounted to direct evidence against Singleton in support of Riffel's claim of age discrimination; (7) after his deposition, the harassment escalated until the date in August, 1997 that he was forced to drive a 75 Ton Road Crane that was known by the supervisor and co-workers to be dangerous, considering plaintiff's recent neck surgery and pre-existing back injuries. While the time frame that Singleton made the comments in Riffel were two years prior to Tinkles deposition, the retaliation against Tinkle occurred immediately after he "participated" in the "protected activity", and the retaliation intensified after Tinkle gave his deposition on June 7, 1997, and he was terminated in August, 1997. The trial court clearly misstated the time of the "tangible employment action".

8. Harris at 22-23:

> Certainly, Title VII bars conduct that would seriously affect a reasonable person's psychological well-being, but the statute is not limited to such conduct . . . whether disregarded Tinkle's evidence of harm flowing from the omissions and commissions by Singleton, his supervisor. While Harris dealt with the standard determining a "hostile" or "abusive" environment, the Court emphasized that such a showing is actionable conduct under Title VII.

The Court further stated that:

> [W]hether an environment is "hostile" or "abusive" can be determined only by looking at all the circumstances, which may include the frequency of the discriminatory conduct; its severity; whether it is physically threatening or humiliating, or a mere offensive utterance; and whether it unreasonably interferes with an employee's work performance.

Id. at 17, 23. The record below is saturated with evidence which establish "abusive" conduct toward Tinkle "culminating" in both physical and psychological harm. In Tinkle, the lower courts did not consider the distinction between "terms and conditions" of employment relating to "operating" a crane versus "driving" a crane eighty (80) miles — an essential indicia in determining "adverse action" or "tangible employment actions".[9] By doing > an environment is "hostile" or "abusive" can be determined only by looking at all the circumstances. These may include . . . whether it is physically threatening or humiliating, or a mere offensive utterance; and whether it unreasonably interferes with an employee's work performance . . . no single factor is required.

9. The EEOC has clearly effectuated this Court's direction in Ellerth and has published "guidance" for evaluating and defining so the lower courts served "effectively to insulate an entire category of employment discrimination from review." Reeves at 148, quoting St. Mary's Honor Center v. Hicks, 509 U.S. 502, 524 (1993). That is, if the assignment of a specific task or job to an employee will most likely result in physical injury, does such constitute evidence from which a jury could find as "abusive" or in "retaliation" for engaging in the "protected activity"? Especially, where it is shown that the assignment was not part of the plaintiff's normal duties, and others who normally performed the job were present, ready and able to perform the assignment without involving any risk of harm or injury.

I. The Decisions Below Misapplies The Evidentiary Burdens Of Plaintiffs Who Attempt To Prove Intentional Discrimination Through Indirect Evidence

In summarily dismissing Tinkle's claim of retaliation, the circuit court applied the "mere inconvenience" standard of Sanchez in a manner which resembled form over substance. In so doing the circuit court improperly disregarded the totality of plaintiff's evidence and gave narrow interpretation to the actionable categories of adverse employment actions. In Oncale this Court directed that ". . . work place behavior often depends on a constellation of surrounding circumstances, expectations,

"tangible employment actions" (EEOC "Notice", id.) The principle in Crady recognized a tangible employment action as including ". . . other indicies that might be unique to a particular situation" (emphasis added). Black's Law Dictionary, Rvsd. 4th Ed., defines indicia as: "The term is much used in the civil law in a sense nearly or entirely synonymous with circumstantial evidence. It denotes facts which give rise to inferences, rather then the inferences themselves. Graham Ice Cream Co. v. Petros, 127 Neb. 172, 254 N.W.869."

and relationships which are not fully captured by a simple recitation of the words used or the physical acts performed." Id. at 77-78. The circuit court elected not to undertake an Oncale analysis.

It is apparent in Ellerth, that ". . . a tangible action taken by a supervisor becomes for Title VII purposes the act of the employer." Id. at 762. The Court further stated: ". . . A tangible employment action constitutes a significant change in employment status, such as . . . reassignment with significant difference in responsibilities. . . ." Id. at 761. In contrast, the circuit court quoted Crady v. Liberty Nat. Bank & Trust Co. of Ind., 993 F.2d 132 (CA7 1993), as did this Court at page 136 "('A material adverse change might be indicated by a termination of employment, . . . or other indicies that might be unique to a particular situation')". Id. at 761. Despite the fact that Tinkle suffered injury as a result of a work assignment, given to him by his supervisor, and it was foreseeable that the assignment would cause the injury that did in fact result, both lower courts held that those allegations did not state a "adverse employment action" under the first prong of Sanchez. This failure is reviewable error in light of Harris that it is enough to show that the harm alleged is "physically threatening" or "abusive". Id. at 17, 23.

Moreover, this Court in resolving Ellerth found that the employee, Ellerth, did not allege that she suffered a tangible employment action, which would deprive Ellerth of the availability of the affirmative defense of knowledge that the supervisor had committed the acts of which she complained. Notwithstanding failure to plead a tangible employment action, this Court held that "Ellerth is still subject to vicarious liability . . ." for the supervisor's activity. In so holding, the Court also noted that "Burlington should have an opportunity to assert and prove the affirmative defense to liability." In the case at bar the evidence supports not only "tangible action", but supports the theory that it was efficaciously calculated by Singleton to adversely alter the terms and conditions of Tinkle's employment.

In like vein, Reeves, held that a plaintiff may survive judgment as a matter of law by submitting two categories of evidence: ". . . first evidence establishing a 'prima facie case,' as that term is used in McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Greene, 411 U.S. 792, 802 (1973); and second, evidence from which a rational factfinder could conclude that the employer's proffered explanation for its actions was false. . . ." A review of the evidence in matters involving summary judgment under Rule 56, the Court in Reeves reasoned:

> . . . In the analogous context of summary judgment under Rule 56, we have stated that the court must review the record "taken as a whole." Matsushita Elec. Industrial Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587 (1986). And the standard for granting summary judgment "mirrors" the standard for judgment as a matter of law, such that "the inquiry under each is the same." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 250-251 (1986); See Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323 (1986). It therefore follows that, in entertaining a motion for judgment as a matter of law, the court should review all of the evidence in the record.
> In doing so, however, the court must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the nonmoving party, and it may not make credibility determinations or weigh the evidence. Lytle v. Household Mfg., Inc., 494 U.S. 545, 554-555 (1990); Liberty Lobby, Inc., > supra at 254; Continental Ore Co. v. Union Carbide & Corbin Corp., 370 U.S. 690, 696 n.6 (1962). "Credibility determinations, the weighing of evidence, and the drawing of legitimate inferences from the facts are jury functions, not those of a judge." Liberty Lobby, supra at 255. Thus, although the court should review the record as a whole, it must disregard all evidence favorable to the moving party that the jury is not required to believe. See Wright & Miller 299. That is, the court should give credence to the evidence favoring the nonmovant as well as that "evidence supporting the moving party that is uncontradicted and unimpeached, at least to the extent that that evidence comes from disinterested witnesses." Id. at 300.

The presence of supervisory action of Ellerth is equally applicable to satisfy the prima facie showing of retaliation.[10]

10. After Ellerth, the United States Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (hereinafter "EEOC") published "NOTICE", No. 915.002 dated June 18, 1999, SUBJECT: Enforcement Guidance: Vicarious Employer Liability for Unlawful Harassment by Supervisors. PURPOSE: "This document provides guidance regarding employer liability for harassment by supervisors based on sex, race, color, religion, national origin, age, disability, or protected activity. In Paragraph IV.B. (Definition of "Tangible Employment Actions") the EEOC, in defining tangible employment actions, relied on this Court's decision in Ellerth, 118 S. Ct. 2269; Faragher v. City of Boca Raton, 118 S. Ct. 2275 (1998) at 2284-85; and Durham Life Ins. Co. v. Evans, 166 F.3d 139, 152 (3d Cir.

(Cont'd)

In this case, this court need only perform a superficial review of the findings entered by the district court and subsequently adopted by the circuit court to resolve that Tinkle was not afforded the benefit of the favorable inferences of Reeves.[11] Additionally, it must be noted that there is ample evidence that the employer's reason for the decision to make Tinkle drive the crane is false. Most relevant to this conclusion is the fact that the two other persons who were assigned to drive the 75 Ton Road Crane were present at the time Singleton ordered Tinkle to drive, and one stated that he would drive instead of Tinkle. Because Tinkle came forth with prima facie evidence and proof of mendacity, summary judgment was precluded.

1999) ("a supervisor can only take a tangible adverse employment action because of the authority delegated by the employer . . . and thus the employer is properly charged with the consequences of that delegation.") The EEOC , based on this Court's ruling in Ellerth at 2268 and 2270; and Faragher, at 2284, 2291, and 2293, listed "examples of tangible employment actions" — which included, among others, "work assignment." In so doing, the EEOC concluded "any employment action qualifies as 'tangible' if it results in a significant change in employment status. For example, significantly changing an individual's duties in his or her existing job constitutes a tangible employment action regardless of whether the individual retains the same salary and benefits."

11. Because he was still recovering from neck surgery and still having problems with his neck, Tinkle begged Singleton to not force him to drive 80 miles in the 75 Ton Road Crane. Tinkle, realizing the danger in driving the road crane, was fearful that he would re-injure his neck. At the time this order was given, both men who were assigned to drive and operate this crane were present and available to carry out the assignment. Further, one of the men, Breakbill, offered to drive the crane because he was fearful that the drive would further aggravate Tinkle's condition. However, Tinkle, fearing the rath of Singleton and that Singleton would retaliate against both him and Breakbill, was forced to decline the offer. (Disreg'd).

II. The Misapplication Of Sanchez Insulates An Entire Category From Review

One consistent theme arises from this Court's leading employment decisions in Reeves and Ellerth: this Court has exercised great care to review rulings which depart from settled practices in identifying, analyzing, and eradicating practices which offend its continued commitment to a non discriminatory work place. It is equally clear that the examples of actionable conduct referenced in those decisions is not exhaustive. The lower courts' departure from this practice in categorizing Tinkle's complaints as "mere inconveniences" and in doing so, failed to follow this Court's direction that trial court should not "treat discrimination differently from other ultimate questions of fact." Reeves at 148.

In this case, the Tenth Circuit cited Sanchez for the proposition of establishing a prima facie case of a retaliation claim. The court held that a plaintiff must show: "1) she was engaged in opposition to Title VII or ADEA discrimination; 2) she was subjected to adverse employment action; and 3) a causal connection existed between the protected activity and the adverse employment action." Id. The principal reason in denying Tinkle's appeal was that Tinkle failed to show that Singleton's actions in refusing to assign Tinkle to a truck with "air-suspension-ride" or the assignment of him to drive the 75 Ton Road Crane did not rise to the level of an "adverse employment action". (Pet. App. "A" at 3a, 4a). The lower courts were reviewing the evidence in a manner that disregarded evidence favorable to Tinkle and failed to draw all reasonable inferences in his favor. Specifically, Tinkle's last injury in August 1997, resulted from being forced to drive the 75 Ton Road Crane approximately 80 miles. While he was qualified to operate the crane, there is a big difference in "operating" the vehicle and "driving" it on the highway. He had only driven the crane one (1) other time in twenty (20) years of employment with OG&E. The lower courts failed to afford Tinkle a favorable inference under the circumstances of his neck injury and other past injuries as being the reasons for driving the road crane only (1) one other time.

III. The Courts' Refusal To Consider Favorable Inferences Treats Discrimination Differently From Other Ultimate Questions Of Fact

The U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission's "Notice" at para I "Introduction", id., clearly enunciates this Courts mandate in Ellerth (524 U.S. at 762) for Title VII and other "protected activity" purposes ". . . from the perspective of the employee, the supervisor and the employer merge into a single entity". Throughout Tinkle's pleadings in the trial court, he complains about adverse treatment inflicted by Singleton (also much of the same is reflected is final order of the trial court), but nevertheless the trial court concluded:

> Plaintiff next alleges that the "denial of air-ride-suspension truck" supports his retaliation claim. Plaintiff avers in his responsive affidavit that Tom Howard and "Breakbill" are assigned to trucks equipped with air-ride-suspension. However, again, Plaintiff makes no specific allegations as to when the "denial" occurred or who participated in this alleged adverse action. Plaintiff also does not allege that such an accommodation was given to other co-workers as a result of an injury. In Plaintiff's deposition testimony, he stated that no work restrictions were placed on him by his treating physician after his March 1997 neck surgery. There is substantial evidence that operating heavy equipment such as cranes was a normal part of Plaintiff's job as well as the jobs of > other OG&E employees having the same position as the Plaintiff. Under these circumstances, no inference of retaliation is shown by Plaintiff's allegation of a "denial of air-ride-suspension truck."

Pet. App. "B" at 34a, 35a.

Just a cursory review of the above excerpt portion of the trial court's order reveals glaring dissensions with Ellerth, Faragher, and Reeves. As example, There should there have been a "favorable inference" drawn from: (1) that a "request" for "air-ride-suspension" was made, considering that a 'denial' of the same was confirmed by the court; (2) that the 'denial' was made in the relevant and material time frame; (3) that since others were assigned to "air-ride-suspension" trucks, it is reasonable to infer that Tinkle, with 20 years of seniority, could be or should have been assigned such a truck — especially given his neck and back injuries; (4) that the complaint was registered with his supervisor, John Singleton; (5) that since Tinkle had driven the crane only one (1) time in 20 years that this was not a part of his normal duties. Thus, applying Ellerth, as a supervisor, the acts of Singleton and that of OG&E "merge as a single entity." Id. at 762.

Without question a rational factfinder could find that the assignment to the road crane, under these "indicies", Crady, was in retaliation for his testimony against Singleton. A reasonable jury could also conclude that Singleton's refusal to allow Tinkle to file a worker's compensation claim was in retaliation for his testimony against Singleton. It is also reasonable to infer that a jury could conclude that Singleton's refusal to allow Tinkle to perform "light duty" when others that were injured were routinely assigned to light duty. Ironically, the district court erroneously concluded that Tinkle's failure to identify the age groups of those who were allowed "light duty" was a bar to his age discrimination claim which is not being raised herein. However the district court used its finding that Tinkle failed to identify the ages of other individuals who had been given "light duty" to bar his claim of age discrimination. The same evidence that allowed the district court to conclude that others had indeed been afforded "light duty" was the evidence that supports a finding the Tinkle made a prima facie showing of retaliation. As example, the court did agree that others were given light duty; and, that finding is determinative that light duty assignments were available to Tinkle, and inferentially that Tinker should have been assigned a air suspension ride truck. (Pet. App. "B" at 15a, 16a).

The district court further found that there was no evidence that Singleton was aware of the adverse testimony given by Tinkle in the Riffel case. This position again presupposes that a reasonable factfinder could not infer that: (1) Tinkle's assignment to drive the 75 Ton Road Crane; (2) Tinkles resultant injury; (3) Singleton's failure to allow Tinkle to file a worker's compensation claim; and (4) Tinkle's ultimate termination was caused by Tinkle's testimony against Singleton.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

DAVID R. TINKLE,

Plaintiff-Appellant,

v.

OKLAHOMA GAS & ELECTRIC COMPANY,

Defendant-Appellee.

ORDER AND JUDGMENT*

Before EBEL, PORFILIO, and KELLY, Circuit Judges.

After examining the briefs and appellate record, this panel has determined unanimously that oral argument would not materially assist the determination of this appeal. See Fed. R. App. P. 34(a)(2); 10th Cir. R. 34.1(G). The case is therefore ordered submitted without oral argument.

---

* This order and judgment is not binding precedent, except under the doctrines of law of the case, res judicata, and collateral estoppel. The court generally disfavors the citation of orders and judgments; nevertheless, an order and judgment may be cited under the terms and conditions of 10th Cir. R. 36.3.

Appendix A

Plaintiff David Tinkle appeals from the magistrate judge's summary judgment dismissal of his complaint against his former employer, Oklahoma Gas and Electric Company (OG&E).[1] Plaintiff alleged age discrimination under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, 29 U.S.C. §§ 621-34; interference with his right to receive benefits in violation of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act, 29 U.S.C. § 1140; intentional or negligent infliction of mental or emotional distress; and retaliation for his participation in another employee's age discrimination claim. On appeal, plaintiff challenges only the dismissal of his retaliation claim.[2] Therefore, all other issues that were decided by the magistrate judge are considered waived. See State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. Mhoon, 31 F.3d 979, 984 n.7 (10th Cir. 1994). We affirm.

The parties are familiar with the facts, which are fully set out in the magistrate judge's very thorough thirty-one page order. Thus, we will only briefly repeat those necessary

1. The parties consented to disposition of this case by the magistrate judge. See 28 U.S.C. § 636(c)(3).

2. At the conclusion of his brief, plaintiff summarily requests the court to also reverse his age discrimination claim. Plaintiff does not otherwise argue his age discrimination claim in his brief. Accordingly, we do not address this claim on appeal. See Ambus v. Granite Bd. of Educ., 975 F.2d 1555, 1558 n.1 (10th Cir. 1992) (stating an issue mentioned in brief on appeal, but not addressed, is waived), modified on other grounds on reh'g, 995 F.2d 992 (10th Cir. 1993); Fed. R. App. P. 28(a)(9)(A) (requiring that argument contain the "appellant's contentions and the reasons for them, with citations to the authorities and parts of the record on which the appellant relies").

to resolve the appeal. Plaintiff was employed by OG&E in its heavy hauling department. In March 1997, he was listed as a witness against OG&E in an age discrimination claim brought by another OG&E employee, Don Riffel, but he refused to meet with OG&E's attorney to discuss the Riffel case. Plaintiff also had neck surgery that month. When he returned to work in April, his supervisor, John Singleton, refused plaintiff's request to be assigned to drive an air-suspension ride truck, which has a softer ride than other trucks. Plaintiff claims his request was refused because of his participation in the Riffel case.

Plaintiff gave his deposition in the Riffel case in June 1997, providing some evidence that Singleton discriminated against Riffel because of his age. In August 1997, Singleton ordered plaintiff to drive a seventy-five ton crane. Plaintiff claims that this crane has a rough and bumpy drive and that he injured his neck driving it. He claims Singleton made him drive the crane in retaliation for his deposition testimony. Thereafter, plaintiff's doctor restricted him to light duty work assignments for two weeks, and plaintiff alleges Singleton refused to give him available light work assignments.

To establish a prima facie case of retaliation, plaintiff must show he was engaged in protected opposition to age discrimination, he was subjected to adverse employment action, and a causal connection existed between the protected activity and the adverse employment action. Sanchez v. Denver Pub. Sch., 164 F.3d 527, 533 (10th Cir. 1998). We have reviewed the briefs and the record on appeal, and are not persuaded by plaintiff's claims of error. His allegations that Singleton refused plaintiff's requested truck assignment or assigned him to drive the crane do not rise to the level of an adverse employment action. See id. at 532 (explaining that "mere inconvenience or an alteration of job responsibilities" does not constitute "adverse employment action," which requires a "significant change in employment status" (quotations omitted)). Further, there is no record support for plaintiff's assertion that Singleton refused him available light-duty job assignments after he injured his neck in August. The magistrate judge properly disregarded statements in plaintiff's affidavit that contradicted his earlier sworn deposition testimony. See Kendrick v. Penske Transp. Servs., Inc., 220 F.3d 1220, 1224 n.2 (10th Cir. 2000). Plaintiff's evidence demonstrates only that some employees were given short-term, light-duty assignments for various medical reasons. However, plaintiff failed to present any evidence of any specific light-duty work that was available for him to do after his injury and it is undisputed that plaintiff never applied for any light-duty work assignments.

Plaintiff also failed to present evidence that a causal connection existed between his participation in the Riffel case and the alleged adverse employment actions. He presented no evidence that Singleton had any knowledge that plaintiff was a witness in the Riffel case, had refused to cooperate with an OG&E attorney or had given deposition testimony implicating Singleton. A party opposing summary judgment cannot rest upon his pleadings, but "must bring forward specific facts showing a genuine issue for trial as to those dispositive matters for which [he or she] carries the burden of proof." Jenkins v. Wood, 81 F.3d 988, 990 (10th Cir. 1996).

The magistrate judge thoroughly addressed the arguments plaintiff raises on appeal, and we AFFIRM for substantially the same reasons as set forth in the magistrate judge's order filed on July 17, 2000.

APPENDIX B — ORDER OF THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF OKLAHOMA DATED AND FILED JULY 17, 2000

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF OKLAHOMA

CIV-99-1132-P

DAVID TINKLE,

Plaintiff,

vs.

OG&E,

Defendant.

ORDER

Before the Court is Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment pursuant to Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(b), to which Plaintiff has responded. The parties have previously consented to proceed before the undersigned Magistrate Judge pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §636(c)(1).

Plaintiff filed this cause of action on August 4, 1999, seeking damages and injunctive relief against Defendant, his former employer. The Complaint alleges a violation of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act ("ADEA") and a violation of 29 U.S.C. §1140 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act ("ERISA").[1] Plaintiff also alleges a pendent state tort claim of intentional or negligent infliction of emotional distress and a claim of retaliation under 29 U.S.C. §623(d) of the ADEA.

Summary judgment may be granted only where the pleadings and any supporting documentary materials "show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed.R.Civ.P. 56(c). In considering a motion for summary judgment, the Court reviews the evidence and the inferences drawn from the record in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Kaul v. Stephan, 83 F.2d 1208, 1212 (10th Cir. 1996); Calhoun v. Gaines, 982 F.2d 1470, 1472 (10th Cir. 1992); Manders v. State of Oklahoma, 875 F.2d 263, 264 (10th Cir. 1989). A dispute is "genuine" if a reasonable jury could return a verdict for the nonmoving party. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248 (1986). "Material facts" are "facts which might affect the outcome of the suit under the governing law." Id. Additionally, if the moving party demonstrates an absence of evidence regarding an issue on which the nonmoving party will bear the burden of proof at trial, the nonmoving party can defeat summary judgment only by designating with evidence outside of the pleadings "specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322 (1986).

this provision of the Civil Rights Acts, nor does Plaintiff allege state action on the part of Defendant, a private corporate entity. Accordingly, it appears that the reference to 42 U.S.C. §1983 is merely surplusage. Nevertheless, if Plaintiff is asserting a claim under 42 U.S.C. §1983, Defendant is entitled to summary judgment on this claim in the absence of the requisite showing of state action. See e.g., Flagg Bros. v. Brooks, 436 U.S. 149, 155-157 (1978).

Appendix B

The following uncontroverted material facts have been considered in resolving Defendant's dispositive Motion[2]:

1. Plaintiff received notice from American Fidelity that American Fidelity was stopping Plaintiff's long-term disability payments.

2. Plaintiff is now and has for seven years worked to take care of a car wash. He picks up paper and trash, washes down the bays, and puts soap and detergent in barrels.

3. Plaintiff had back surgery in 1985, following which he was placed on light duty for a short time.

4. Other members of Plaintiff's work group have previously been temporarily placed on light duty following various injuries, including Don Riffel who was placed on light duty for a little over a month.

5. Plaintiff started keeping written notes as early as 1995 of job-related issues because he felt he was

2. In many instances in Plaintiff's Response to Defendant's motion, Plaintiff makes broad denials that are either inconsistent with his own deposition testimony or contain argumentative conclusions unsupported by facts showing a dispute exists. Plaintiff cannot simply deny or alter statements made in his deposition. Bohn v. Park City Group, Inc., 94 F.3d 1457, 1463 (10th Cir. 1996) (when affidavit contradicts deposition testimony, "the affidavit should not be considered"). Plaintiff also cannot deny or alter the terms of the disability policy in question, which, contrary to Plaintiff's assertions, are attached to Defendant's Motion.

being harassed by John Singleton, and he felt that John Singleton, who was not his supervisor at that time, was out to get him. According to Plaintiff, Mr. Singleton harasses "anyone he wants to."

6. It was part of Plaintiff's job at OG&E even before 1980 to operate a crane. Between 1980 and 1990 when Plaintiff worked in the heavy hauling department at OG&E Plaintiff operated a crane two to three times a week to load and unload equipment.

7. When Plaintiff was released by his doctor to return to work after his March 1997 neck surgery, Plaintiff's doctor told him he could not continue very much longer hauling and driving the semis and operating heavy equipment.

8. Plaintiff reinjured his neck on August 21, 1997, while driving a road crane and after that he was never medically released to return to the full duty of his position with OG&E.

9. Plaintiff applied for and received disability payments from American Fidelity following his August 1997 injury. Plaintiff understands that American Fidelity oversees and administers the long-term disability program adopted by OG&E for its employees.

10. Periodically, American Fidelity requested documents from Plaintiff's doctor or information from Plaintiff.

11. Plaintiff understood that he had to fill out forms as requested by American Fidelity in order to continue receiving employment disability benefits.

12. When Plaintiff attempted to return to his previous job around May 24, 1999, he had not been released to full duty by his doctor.

13. Because of Plaintiff's medical restrictions, he could not return to his previous job at OG&E, and Plaintiff never applied for any other positions at OG&E.

14. The most recent medical information provided by Plaintiff to OG&E and signed by Dr. Schimandle reflects the following restrictions: no lifting or carrying of objects weighing more than twenty-five pounds; no repetitive use of the hands, wrists, or fingers; and no operating of heavy equipment.[3]

15. Under the terms of the disability plan offered to OG&E employees, an employee is entitled to receive benefits for the first 24 months of disability if the employee "is disabled and unable to do substantially all of the duties of his employment," and after that the employee is entitled to receive benefits if he "is disabled and completely unable to engage in any occupation for wage or profit for which he is reasonably qualified by training, education, or experience."

3. Plaintiff contends in his Response to Defendant's Motion that this is a "fraudulent" document but does not allege any facts to support this conclusion or dispute the facts contained in the document.

Appendix B

17. American Fidelity received a letter from Lewis Barber, Jr., Plaintiff's attorney, indicating that Plaintiff was interested in appealing American Fidelity's denial of long-term disability benefits to Plaintiff. The letter was dated June 5, 1999.

18. Ms. McKinney responded to Mr. Barber by letter dated July 22, 1999, asking Mr. Barber to forward to American Fidelity the information upon which the appeal is based and to include any information that will allow the company to understand fully the reasons he felt the decision to terminate benefits beyond twenty-four (24) months should be reevaluated.

19. Barber responded by letter dated August 2, 1999: "I will meet with my client no later than Friday of this week and forward to you the information you requested."

20. To date, American Fidelity has not received information from Barber or Plaintiff to pursue an appeal.

21. Plaintiff received a letter from American Fidelity advising him: "If you disagree with this decision, you have the right to appeal. Your appeal must be made in writing 90 days from the date of this letter and should include any additional information which will help us evaluate the claim." Plaintiff admits that he never appealed the decision, but he gave the letter to his attorney.

Appendix B

I. ADEA Claim

Defendant seeks summary judgment as to Plaintiff's age discrimination claim. Under the ADEA, it is unlawful for an employer "to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual or otherwise discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's age." 29 U.S.C. §623(a)(1). " 'A plaintiff who seeks to prove that an employer discriminated against him or her can use either direct or circumstantial evidence.' " Stone v. Autoliv ASP, Inc., 210 F.3d 1132, 1136 (10th Cir. 2000) (quoting Ingels v. Thiokol Corp., 42 F.3d 616, 620 (10th Cir. 1994)).

"A plaintiff proves discrimination through direct evidence by establishing proof of an existing policy which itself constitutes discrimination." Id. (quoting Ramsey v. City & County of Denver, 907 F.2d 1004, 1008 (10th Cir. 1990), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 907 (1992)). As evidence of age discrimination, Plaintiff points to the comments by his supervisor, John Singleton, directed toward another employee in Plaintiff's work group, Don Riffel, (1) that Riffel was an "old man," (2) that after Riffel was fired Singleton was "not going to back that old man," and (3) that "if it had been anybody else, I would have gone to bat for him. You know how old men are, they are — they aren't going to change." Plaintiff's Response, at 19. Plaintiff asserts that these statements by Singleton provide direct evidence that Defendant had a policy of making the age of older employees "a factor in weighing their value and retention in the work force." Plaintiff's Response, at 19.

Appendix B

The statements attributed to Singleton to which Plaintiff refers were taken from Plaintiff's own deposition in another age discrimination action brought by Riffel against OG&E in this Court. Plaintiff's deposition was taken in that matter on June 6, 1997. Defendant's Motion, Ex. G. In July 1997, the district court entered summary judgment in favor of OG&E. Defendant's Motion, Ex. H. However, on appeal, the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals issued a decision on March 31, 1998, finding that Plaintiff's deposition testimony provided some direct evidence of age discrimination against Riffel sufficient to overcome summary judgment and reversing the summary judgment previously entered. Defendant's Motion, Ex. I (Riffel v. OG&E, No. 97-6304 (10th Cir. Mar. 31, 1998) (Order and Judgment)).

Plaintiff's deposition testimony in the Riffel case concerned remarks made by Singleton directed primarily toward Riffel, not Plaintiff. The remarks were not made within close temporal proximity to any of the alleged adverse employment actions taken against Plaintiff. Riffel was terminated in March 1995, and Plaintiff testified in the Riffel deposition that the remarks were made in a meeting a few days after Riffel was terminated. Defendant's Motion, Exs. H, I; Defendant's Reply, Ex. A, at 23, Although Plaintiff alleges in his Complaint that Defendant "has continuously discriminated against him because of his age," in Plaintiff's responsive affidavit Plaintiff describes an incident in August 1997 in which he was ordered by Singleton to drive a 75-ton road crane "while I was still recovering from neck surgery." Plaintiff also alleges that Singleton refused to allow Plaintiff to drive an "air-ride-suspension" truck or to give Plaintiff a "light duty" assignment following his return to work from neck surgery on April 28, 1997. These allegations involve actions taken more than two years after the alleged statements by Singleton, and Singleton's alleged statements do not provide direct evidence of an existing policy by OG&E which itself constitutes discrimination.

Although in the Riffel case the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals concluded that the age-related comments attributed to Singleton were "not an instance of a stray remark in the work place . . . ," see Defendant's Motion, Ex. 1, at 4, those same comments, allegedly made more than two years prior to any alleged adverse employment actions involving Plaintiff and directed primarily toward another employee, constitute only "[i]solated comments, unrelated to the challenged action, [that] are insufficient to show discriminatory animus" in this case. Cone v. Longmont United Hospital Assoc., 14 F.3d 526, 531 (10th Cir. 1994). The fact that the same supervisor was involved is not alone sufficient to create any nexus between the earlier alleged comments directed toward Riffel and the alleged adverse actions taken in 1997 or subsequently involving the Plaintiff.

To establish a claim of age discrimination under the ADEA based on circumstantial evidence, the plaintiff must show: 1) he is a member of the class protected by the statute; 2) he suffered an adverse employment action; 3) he was qualified for the position at issue; and 4) he was treated less favorably than others not in the protected class. Sanchez v. Denver Public Schools, 164 F.3d 527, 531 (10th Cir. 1998). "Once the plaintiff establishes a prima facie case, the burden shifts to the defendant to articulate a legitimate nondiscriminatory reason for the action. If the defendant does so, the plaintiff must show the defendant's preferred reasons are pretextual." Id.

Plaintiff alleges three succinct adverse employment actions: 1) the refusal of his supervisor, Singleton, to assign him to "light duty" or to operate trucks equipped with air-ride-suspension when he returned to work in April 1997 following his neck surgery, and in particular the action of Singleton in August 1997 in ordering Plaintiff to drive a 75-ton road crane which has a "very tough and bumpy ride" and "relatively low" roof space in its cabin; 2) his placement on short-term disability on or about August 25, 1997; and 3) OG&E's refusal to reinstate him to his previous job on or about May 24, 1999. In his deposition testimony, Plaintiff also stated that he was treated differently due to age discrimination because his supervisor, John Singleton, "was all the time telling me that I ought to find me another job. My . . . I was getting older, my body was wearing out, and I couldn't continue to do this, and my doctors made the same statement." Defendant's Motion, Ex. C, at 105. Plaintiff testified that by the phrase "continue to do this," his supervisor and his doctor were referring to heavy manual labor and "bouncing in the truck." Id.

There is no dispute that during all relevant periods of time Plaintiff was and is a member of the class protected by the ADEA. Plaintiff first contends he was treated differently because of his age with regard to his job responsibilities between April 1997, when he returned to work following neck surgery, and August 1997, when he reinjured his neck. Plaintiff presents the affidavits of himself and three other present or former OG&E employees in response to Defendant's Motion. These affiants aver that some OG&E employees who had been hurt or injured were placed on "light duty" assignments following their injuries, and one of the affiants, Don Riffel, avers that he was "placed on restricted duty for several months" following an on-the-job injury. Plaintiff's Response, Exs. 2, 3, 4. However, none of the ages of these other employees or Riffel is given, and none of the affiants stated that only younger employees or that all injured employees were given special accommodations in their subsequent work responsibilities.

The employees aver that "special training was necessary" to drive and operate the 75-ton road crane, and that "very few" employees were assigned to drive and operate the 75-ton road crane. Plaintiff's Response, Exs. 2, 3. Plaintiff and the affiants identified Rick Brakebill, Craig Sitton, and Mike Neary as individuals who had been assigned to drive and operate the 75-ton road crane. Plaintiff's Response, Exs. 1, 2. Plaintiff avers that "Breakbill (sic) is also much younger than me." Plaintiff's Response, Ex. 1, at 3. In his affidavit, Plaintiff also avers that on the date he was ordered by Singleton to drive the 75-ton road crane, "the regular crane operators, Rick Brakebill and Mike Neary were both on duty and available to drive the road crane." Plaintiff's Response, Ex. 1, at 3. However, Plaintiff concedes that he had driven the 75-ton road crane once before, indicating that Plaintiff was one of the "very few" employees who had been assigned previously to drive the 75-ton road crane.

Plaintiff stated in his deposition that he felt Singleton harassed him beginning in 1985, Defendant's Motion, Ex. C, at 137. However, Plaintiff also stated that Singleton harassed other unidentified employees as well. Id. Plaintiff stated that it was common for the nine or ten heavy hauling department employees to "fill[ ] in" for the regular crane operators when necessary, and Plaintiff had operated cranes two to three times a week. Defendant's Motion, Ex. A, at 35-36. There is no dispute that Plaintiff's doctor released him to full duty after his March 1997 neck surgery, indicating no job accommodations were considered medically necessary. Defendant's Motion, Ex. A, at 20. Plaintiff avers in his responsive affidavit that he "begged John Singleton to not make me drive the 75-ton road crane back from Ardmore, and in doing so, I reemphasized that due to my back and neck injuries that I did not believe I could handle the assignment." However, Plaintiff's deposition testimony contradicts his affidavit. In his deposition, Plaintiff stated that when he was ordered to drive the crane, he told his supervisor "I didn't need to be in the crane; I knew how to drive it . . . [I]t was too rough," and Plaintiff stated he did not specifically inform Singleton that he was afraid he would get hurt if he drove the crane. Defendant's Reply Supplement, at 52-53. Plaintiff does not explain the contradiction between the statements in his affidavit and in his deposition testimony. The facts were well within his knowledge at the time of Plaintiff's deposition. Accordingly, Plaintiff has not created a material issue of fact without his contradictory affidavit. See Franks v. Nimmo, 796 F.2d 1230, 1237 (10th Cir. 1986) ("courts will disregard a contrary affidavit when they conclude that it constitutes an attempt to create a sham fact issue").

Both Raymond Rigsby and Glen Chartney, who also are employed in the heavy hauling department at OG&E, testified in depositions that they had driven the 75-ton road crane. Chartney averred that he had worked for OG&E for 26 years and he had driven this crane 20 times. Rigsby averred that he had worked for OG&E for eighteen years and he had driven the crane at least 12 times a year. Both of these employees testified that driving the crane was part of their job, even when the regular crane operators were available to drive the crane. Defendant's Supplement to Motion (Docs. 52, 53), Exs. E, F. There is nothing in the Plaintiff's evidence to indicate that Plaintiff's age was a motivating factor in determining his job responsibilities. Plaintiff apparently believes special accommodations should have been made as a result of his neck and back injuries, but he fails to demonstrate that a disputed issue of fact exists with regard to the motivation of the supervisor in refusing to make these special accommodations. Plaintiff has not shown a prima facie case of age discrimination as to the allegations regarding his job responsibilities between April and August 1997, because Plaintiff has not raised a disputed issue of fact concerning the fourth requirement for an ADEA claim of less favorable treatment than others not in the protected class.

Plaintiff contends that his placement on short-term employment disability in August 1997 was an adverse employment decision motivated by age discrimination. However, Plaintiff stated in his deposition that he reinjured his neck on August 21, 1997, and avers in his affidavit that his doctor placed him on a "light duty" work restriction on August 25, 1997. Plaintiff stated in his deposition that doctors never released him to return to his previous job after that date. Defendant's Motion, Ex. B, at 39-40. Moreover, it is undisputed that Plaintiff understands that American Fidelity oversees and administers the disability program adopted for OG&E employees, and that American Fidelity requested information from Plaintiff and medical documents or statements from Plaintiff's doctor during the two-year period that he was on disability.

Plaintiff avers that on August 25, 1997, when he provided Singleton with his doctor's note reflecting he was restricted to light duty, that Singleton conferred with Singleton's supervisor, Mr. Newton, and informed Plaintiff that the company would "take your doctor's recommendation and put you on light duty." Plaintiff's Response, Ex. 1, at 4. Plaintiff avers he was then told to go home because Singleton "did not have any light duty for me." Id. Plaintiff avers he was allowed to work light duty for two days filling in for a secretary who was on vacation but was told that he would then "have to use disability leave until I was 100%." Id., at 5. Plaintiff further avers that the paperwork was processed by "[m]y supervisor and Belleva Johnson of the Human Resources Department. . . ." Id.

Although Plaintiff contends he was placed on light duty work restrictions by his treating doctor only for two weeks, there is ample uncontroverted evidence in the record reflecting that after August 25, 1997, doctors who examined Plaintiff concluded Plaintiff is unable to perform the requirements of his previous heavy equipment operator position. Defendant's Motion, Exs. 3, 4; Supplement to Defendant's Motion (Doc. #31), Ex. 12. The only reasonable inference that can be drawn from the evidence is that Plaintiff was injured in August 1997, and because his doctor placed him on light duty work restrictions and no light duty work was available for an individual in Plaintiff's position, Plaintiff took employment disability in order to receive continuing income and keep his job as long as possible.

Plaintiff contends that undue influence was placed on him to take disability instead of filing a workers' compensation claim. In response to Defendant's Motion, Plaintiff avers in his affidavit that Singleton told Plaintiff that he "would not allow" Plaintiff to file a workers' compensation claim" and that the company "was not going to pay any workers' compensation to me." Plaintiff's Response, Ex. 1. However, Plaintiff's responsive affidavit contradicts his deposition testimony, in which Plaintiff stated he never inquired about workers' compensation and was never told he could not file a workers' compensation claim. Defendant's Reply, Ex. B, at 18, 27. Plaintiff does not attempt to explain this contradiction, and the facts were well within his personal knowledge at the time of his deposition. Accordingly, Plaintiff has not presented a disputed issue of fact concerning the fourth requirement for an ADEA claim with his allegation that he was forced to take employment disability benefits. See Franks, 796 F.2d at 1237.

Plaintiff next alleges that OG&E's refusal to reinstate him to his previous position on or about May 24, 1999, supports his claim of age discrimination. Defendant moves for summary judgment as to this claim on the basis that Plaintiff was not qualified for his previous position at the time OG&E refused to reinstate him to that position. It is not disputed that after August 21, 1997, Plaintiff was never medically released to return to the full duties of his previous position as a heavy equipment operator. Accordingly, Plaintiff has not demonstrated with this allegation that a material issue of fact exists concerning the second requirement for an ADEA claim.

Finally, Plaintiff stated in his deposition that he was treated differently due to age discrimination based on the statements by Singleton that Plaintiff was "getting older" and his "body was wearing out" and he "couldn't continue to" perform heavy manual labor or sit in a "bouncing" truck. Plaintiff conceded in his deposition that his doctor had also stated to Plaintiff following his March 1997 neck surgery that Plaintiff "could not continue very much longer hauling and driving the semis and operating heavy equipment." Defendant's Motion, Ex. A, at 43. The only reasonable inference to be drawn from Singleton's statement is that Plaintiff's physical capacity to perform the heavy demands of his job was diminishing to the point that Singleton believed Plaintiff needed to find lighter work.

Plaintiff does not point to any particular employment action as being related to these alleged statements or even allege when the statements were made. The statements express Singleton's personal opinion, and "[a]t most, such statements [of personal opinion] provide circumstantial evidence of discriminatory intent because they 'require the trier of fact to infer that discrimination was a motivating cause of an employment decision.' " Stone, 210 F.3d at 1137 (quoting EEOC v. Wiltel, Inc., 81 F.3d 1508, 1514 (10th Cir. 1996)). In this case, Defendant strongly argues that Plaintiff was no longer qualified for his position on August 25, 1997, and thereafter because of work restrictions placed on him by his doctor and other examining physicians. Plaintiff vehemently argues in response that on August 25, 1997, Plaintiff's doctor placed only a 2-week light duty restriction on Plaintiff. However, Plaintiff stated in his deposition that he was never medically released to the full duties of his heavy equipment operator position after August 25, 1997. Although Plaintiff stated in his deposition that on August 25, 1997, he was told to go home because no light duty was available at that time, Plaintiff avers in his responsive affidavit that "there was work that I could have performed for the specified time and longer." Plaintiff's Response, Ex. 1, at 5. Plaintiff provides no evidence of any specific work that was available to him with his work restrictions on or after August 25, 1997, and it is not disputed that Plaintiff never applied for a different position at OG&E. Even if there was light duty work Plaintiff could have temporarily performed on or after August 25, 1997, there is no evidence that Plaintiff could have returned to the full duties of his previous job after that date, and he has not presented a disputed issue of fact that age discrimination was a motivating factor in any adverse employment decision. Accordingly, Defendant is entitled to summary judgment concerning Plaintiff's claim of age discrimination under the ADEA.

II. ERISA Claim

Defendant advances two reasons why it should be granted summary judgment concerning Plaintiff's claim under ERISA. Defendant contends that (1) American Fidelity, and not OG&E, is the fiduciary over the disability program adopted for OG&E employees, and therefore OG&E cannot be sued under ERISA with regard to the decision to terminate Plaintiff's long-term disability benefits; and (2) Plaintiff cannot pursue a claim under ERISA because he failed to exhaust administrative remedies.

In the third ground of Plaintiff's Complaint, Plaintiff alleges a violation of 29 U.S.C. §1140, a provision of ERISA which makes it "unlawful for any person to discharge, fine, suspend, expel, discipline, or discriminate against a participant or beneficiary for exercising any right to which he is entitled under the provisions of an employee benefit plan, this subchapter, section 1201 of [title 29 U.S.C.], or the Welfare and Pension Plans Disclosure Act [29 U.S.C.A. §301 et seq.], or for the purpose of interfering with the attainment of any right which such participant may become entitled under the plan, this subchapter, or the Welfare and Pension Plans Disclosure Act." 29 U.S.C. §1140. In support of this claim, Plaintiff alleges in the Complaint that he "suffered permanent partial disability" as a result of a job-related injury, that because of his disability he "qualified for Defendant's short-term and long-term disability insurance plan and certain other employee benefit plans," that Defendant "initially extended such benefits to Plaintiff, but intentionally failed to advise Plaintiff concerning Plaintiff's right to return to work," and when Plaintiff demanded to return to work "Defendant continued to misrepresent certain conditions so as to have Plaintiff believe that there was no position for which Plaintiff could perform," that "Defendant possessed a substantial economic motive to terminate him and so acted in order to deny Plaintiff certain employee benefit plans." Complaint, at 3.

Appendix B

In order to be entitled to relief under 29 U.S.C. §1140, Plaintiff "is required to prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that his discharge was motivated by an intent to interfere with employee benefits protected by ERISA." Phelps v. Fields Real Estate Co., 991 F.2d 645, 649 (10th Cir. 1993). Plaintiff's convoluted allegations and evidentiary documents presented with regard to his ERISA claim provide no direct evidence of discriminatory intent. He must, at the very least, then, "introduce evidence that suggests interference with ERISA rights was a motivating factor" in his termination. Clark v. Coats & Clark, Inc., 990 F.2d 1217, 1223-1224 (11th Cir. 1993).

There is no dispute that OG&E's employee disability plan is governed by ERISA. See 29 U.S.C. §1003. However, it is not employee disability benefits that Plaintiff contends were denied through unlawful interference. Rather, in Plaintiff's Response to Defendant's dispositive Motion, Plaintiff clarifies his ERISA claim. Plaintiff contends that "OG&E had a duty to process Plaintiff's claim for worker's compensation, yet OG&E fraudulently misrepresented to American Fidelity that the injury did not result from Plaintiff's employment." Plaintiff's Response, at 13-14.

In support of his claim of misrepresentation, Plaintiff refers to a form that American Fidelity sent to OG&E and that was completed by OG&E's human resources administrator on March 6, 1998, in which the administrator responded "no" in response to the inquiry whether Plaintiff's disability resulted from his employment. Plaintiff's Response, Ex. 5. However, Plaintiff stated in his deposition that he wasn't sure whether the back injury that resulted in his 1985 back surgery was caused by his employment, and also stated that he did not file a workers' compensation claim for his 1997 neck surgery because he "didn't want to make waves." Defendant's Reply, Ex. B, at 16, 18. He further stated in deposition testimony that no one ever told him not to file a workers' compensation claim and that he never even asked about filing such a claim. Id. at 18, 27. Plaintiff provides no support for his allegation that OG&E had a "duty" to file a workers' compensation claim for Plaintiff. The only duty prescribed by Oklahoma law upon employers is the duty to post a notice advising employees that they are covered by the Workers' Compensation Act and that workers' compensation counseling services are available at the Workers' Compensation Court. Okla. Stat. tit. 85, §43 (1991). Plaintiff does not allege lack of such notice. Rather, Plaintiff's deposition testimony reflects his knowledgeable choice not to seek workers' compensation benefits. Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to Plaintiff, there is no material issue of fact as to whether OG&E interfered with Plaintiff's right to workers' compensation benefits, and Defendant is entitled to summary judgment on this claim.

Assuming that Plaintiff is also asserting an ERISA claim under 29 U.S.C. § 1140 based on the termination of his disability benefits, it is not disputed that Plaintiff applied for and received short-term disability benefits for two years, and that the disability program adopted by OG&E was administered by OG&E's disability carrier, American Fidelity. It is not disputed that Plaintiff's request for long-term disability benefits was denied by American Fidelity. See Defendant's Motion, Ex. D, at 27. In a letter to Plaintiff dated April 21, 1999, Plaintiff was advised by American Fidelity that his disability benefits would cease after August 29, 1999. Id., at 27.

It is further not disputed that after August 25, 1997, Plaintiff was never medically released to return to the full duties of his position at OG&E. Curiously, although Plaintiff alleges in his Response to Defendant's Motion brief that OG&E misrepresented to American Fidelity that Plaintiff was eligible for disability benefits, Plaintiff inconsistently alleges in his Complaint that he qualified for the disability benefits provided by American Fidelity. Regardless of which allegation is the one Plaintiff wishes to rely on, Plaintiff has presented no evidence to support his bare conclusion of a "misrepreseniation" by OG&E with regard to Plaintiff's eligibility for disability benefits. OG&E provides uncontroverted evidence that the disability program was wholly administered by American Fidelity and that the decision to allow and to terminate Plaintiff's disability benefits was wholly within the discretionary authority of American Fidelity.

Plaintiff testified in his deposition that he understood that his May 24, 1999 request for reinstatement to his previous job was denied "[b]ecause there was no light duty that I could perform" and because his doctors had not released him for the full duties of his previous job. Defendant's Motion, Ex. B, at 5-6. Plaintiff conceded in his deposition that he never applied for any other job at OG&E. Id., at 101. The undisputed evidence shows Plaintiff was terminated after American Fidelity determined that Plaintiff was no longer entitled to receive disability benefits. Accordingly, there is no material issue of fact as to whether OG&E unlawfully interfered with Plaintiff's disability benefits, and OG&E is entitled to summary judgment on this claim.[4]

III. State Law Tort Claim for Negligent or Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress

Defendant seeks summary judgment concerning Plaintiff's pendent state law claim for damages for negligent or intentional infliction of emotional distress, contending that the claim is either preempted by ERISA or the Oklahoma Workers' Compensation Act, or that Plaintiff has not stated sufficient facts to allege a claim of intentional or negligent infliction of emotional distress.

In his Complaint, Plaintiff alleges that Defendant's "wrongful and intentional conduct . . . in harassing Plaintiff and in subjecting Plaintiff to disparate treatment" because of his age, including "represent[ing] to Plaintiff that he was still being carried as an employee of the Defendant due to his on the job injury, when in fact the Defendant had terminated" Plaintiff, has caused Plaintiff to suffer mental and emotional stress. However, in response to Defendant's dispositive Motion, Plaintiff makes different allegations in support of his claim of negligent or intentional infliction of emotional distress. These new allegations relate solely to the work-related "order[ ]" from Plaintiff's supervisor,

4. It is not necessary to determine whether or not OG&E is a fiduciary of the long-term disability benefit program adopted by OG&E for its employees or whether or not Plaintiff exhausted administrative remedies. Plaintiff does not seek benefits under the program, but alleges OG&E interfered with his right to receive those benefits under 29 U.S.C. §1140.

Singleton, to drive the 75-ton road crane in August 1997. Plaintiff contends that this work assignment was so "tempered with evil intent" that it "intentionally placed the life of Plaintiff in grave and unnecessary jeopardy." Plaintiff's Response, at 18.

In Eddy v. Brown, 715 P.2d 74 (Okla. 1996), the Oklahoma Supreme Court reaffirmed that the state recognizes the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress and that the tort "is governed by the narrow standards of §46 Restatement of Torts (Second) [1997]." Id. at 76. The Restatement establishes that " '[o]ne who by extreme or outrageous conduct intentionally or recklessly causes severe emotional distress to another is subject to liability for such emotional distress, and if bodily harm to the other results from it, for such bodily harm.' " Id. (quoting §46 Restatement of Torts (Second)). In analyzing a tort claim under this standard, "[i]t is the trial court's responsibility initially to determine whether the defendant's conduct may reasonably be regarded as sufficiently extreme and outrageous to meet the §46 standards. Only when it is found that reasonable [persons] would differ in an assessment of this critical issue may the tort-of-outrage claim be submitted to a jury. . . . Conduct which, though unreasonable, is neither 'beyond all possible bounds of decency' in the setting in which it occurred, nor is one that can be 'regarded as utterly intolerable in a civilized community,' falls short of having actionable quality." Id., at 76-77 (footnote omitted).

Preliminarily, Plaintiff describes intentional conduct by his supervisor but the heading given to this particular argument identifies his claim as being one for "intentional or negligent infliction of mental and/or emotional distress." Plaintiff Complaint, at 2. In Oklahoma, "accidental injuries arising out of and in the course of employment" which are "reasonably connected with the conditions of employment" are compensable solely through the Oklahoma Workers' Compensation Act. Okla. Stat. tit. 95, §3(7) (1991). Defendant asserts in its Reply that Plaintiff's claim for negligent injury resulting from driving the road crane is barred by the Oklahoma Workers' Compensation Act.

"An on-the-job injury 'arises out of employment only if (1) a causal connection exists between the conditions under which the work was required to be performed and the resulting injury, and (2) the injury resulted from a risk reasonably incident to the employment." Decker v. Oklahoma State University, 766 P.2d 1371, 1374-1375 (Okla. 1988). Plaintiff clearly alleges that his injuries were caused by the conditions under which he was required to work, and the risk of a neck injury in Plaintiff's heavy equipment operator position is certainly "reasonably incident to the employment." Consequently, Plaintiff's sole remedy for negligent injury under the facts alleged by Plaintiff is the Oklahoma Workers' Compensation Act. See Oklahoma City v. Schoonover, 535 P.2d 688, 691 (Okla. 1975) (emotional stress engendered by working conditions and nature of employment and accompanied by accidental injury is compensable under workers' compensation program).

Plaintiff avers in his responsive affidavit that when Singleton ordered him to drive the 75-ton road crane, he "begged John Singleton to not make me drive the 75-ton road crane back from Ardmore, and in doing so,

I reemphasized that due to my back and neck injuries that I did not believe I could handle the assignment." Plaintiff's Response, Ex. 1, at 3.

Plaintiff's affidavit statements vary considerably from his deposition testimony concerning this incident. In his deposition, Plaintiff stated that he > told John that I didn't think I should be in it, that I knew how to run it. And he said, "You need the experience and you're going to drive it." And I said, "I know how to drive it." He said, "You're being paid top pay to do everything. You will drive it back from Ardmore."

Defendant's Reply, Ex. B, at 42. Plaintiff also stated in his deposition that driving cranes was part of the job for all of the employees in the heavy hauling division at OG&E, and that his treating physician had placed no restrictions on his ability to work following his March 1997 neck surgery, even though his physician was aware of the requirements of his position, including driving and operating cranes. Id., at 42-44. Other OG&E employees in the heavy hauling division have testified that driving cranes, including the 75-ton road crane, is a normal part of the job. Defendant's Supplemental Exhibits E, F.

In Plaintiff's deposition, he did not testify that he alerted his supervisor to any physical-related difficulty with driving the road crane. His deposition testimony concerning his supervisor's statements certainly do not reflect "evil intent" to cause Plaintiff physical harm. Rather, the supervisor's remarks indicate the supervisor ordered Plaintiff to drive the crane for two solely job-related reasons: (1) Plaintiff needed experience in driving the crane, and (2) Plaintiff was being paid the higher salary of a heavy equipment operator, and thus he was expected to drive all of the heavy equipment when needed. Reasonable persons would not differ in their assessment of the Plaintiff's deposition testimony, and there is no material disputed fact regarding the claim of intentional infliction of emotional distress asserted by Plaintiff. Reasonable persons would not find that the action of Plaintiff's supervisor in ordering him to drive the road crane on August 21, 1997, was so extreme or outrageous as to subject Defendant to liability for intentional infliction of emotional distress under the standard employed in Oklahoma for such a claim. Thus, Defendant is entitled to summary judgment on this claim.

V. Claim for Retaliation

Plaintiff's final claim asserted in the Complaint is a claim for retaliation for protected activity under 29 U.S.C. §623(d) of the ADEA. Plaintiff alleges that following his deposition testimony in Riffel's age discrimination suit, Plaintiff experienced different treatment, including intensified harassment, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and termination. Defendant moves for summary judgment on this claim.

In his Response to the motion, Plaintiff alleges that within two months of his deposition against OG&E in Riffel's age discrimination case, Plaintiff suffered these specific reprisals: he was denied a light duty assignment, he was denied an air-ride-suspension truck, his health was jeopardized by requiring him to drive the 75-ton road crane, he was denied the right to file a workers' compensation claim regarding the injury that occurred on August 21, 1997, he was denied the right to work for two weeks in a light duty assignment, and in his Complaint he alleges that his termination was in retaliation for the deposition testimony.

The ADEA makes it unlawful to retaliate against an employee for engaging in certain protected activities, including testifying, assisting, or participating in any manner in litigation under the ADEA. 29 U.S.C. §623(d). The familiar McDonnell Douglas burden-shifting analysis is generally employed in reviewing an ADEA retaliation claim. Anderson v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 861 F.2d 631, 634 (10th Cir. 1998). Under this approach, the plaintiff must first establish a prima facie case of retaliation by showing "(1) protected opposition to discrimination or participation in a proceeding arising out of discrimination; (2) adverse action by the employer contemporaneously or subsequent to the employee's protected activity; and (3) a causal connection between such activity and the employer's action." Id. If the plaintiff establishes a prima facie case, the burden of production shifts to the defendant who must articulate a legitimate, nondiscriminatory reason for the adverse action. Id. "Once the defendant has dispelled the inference of retaliation by establishing a legitimate reason, 'the plaintiff may still prevail if she demonstrates the articulated reason was a mere pretext for discrimination.' " Id. (quoting Burrus v. United Telephone Co. of Kansas, Inc., 683 F.2d 339, 343 (10th Cir., cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1071 (1982)).

Appendix B

The undisputed facts reveal that on June 6, 1997, Plaintiff testified in a deposition on behalf of Riffel, who had sued OG&E in this Court under the ADEA. Defendant's Reply, Ex. A. On July 31, 1997, United States District Judge Wayne E. Alley entered summary judgment in favor of OG&E in the Riffel case. Defendant's Motion, Ex. H. No mention was made of Plaintiff's deposition in this order. The order of the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals in Riffel's appeal of the summary judgment was entered on March 31, 1998. In the Tenth Circuit's order, the appellate court mentioned for the first time the deposition of Plaintiff on behalf of Riffel. The appellate court concluded that this testimony constituted some direct evidence of age discrimination against Riffel and reversed Judge Alley's entry of summary judgment. Any actionable retaliation of Plaintiff under the ADEA could not have occurred prior to June 6, 1997, as that was the date on which Plaintiff was deposed in the Riffel matter.[5] Defendant does not question whether or not the deposition involved protected activity, and the evidence is indisputable that the Plaintiff's deposition testimony was protected activity within the meaning of 29 U.S.C. §623(d).

Plaintiff identifies several allegedly adverse employment actions. However, Plaintiff does not specifically allege who denied him a "light duty assignment" or when this action occurred. It is not disputed that other members of Plaintiff's heavy equipment operator work group had previously been temporarily placed on light duty following various injuries. However, there is no evidence all employees in Plaintiff's work group received "light duty" assignments following injuries. Plaintiff returned to work following neck surgery in April 1997. Plaintiff testified in his deposition that he was placed on light duty for two days when he returned from neck surgery. Defendant's Motion, Ex. A, at 27. Plaintiff testified he had previously been placed on light duty after back surgery and foot surgery, and the light duty assignment following his back surgery lasted for "maybe a month." Defendant's Motion, Ex. B, at 94, 96. Plaintiff testified that another co-worker, Rick Brakebill, was given a light duty assignment for "probably a week" following an injury, that another co-worker, Ray Pierce, was given light duty for "a couple of weeks" following his injury, that Tom Howard was given light duty for "a couple of weeks" after an injury, and that Don Riffel was given light duty for "a little over a month" after an injury. Defendant's Motion, Ex. B, at 81-84, 93. Plaintiff's return to work preceded his deposition testimony by two months, and Plaintiff did not report any work-related injury until August 25, 1997, four months after he returned to work. Plaintiff testified that his physician had placed no restriction on his ability to perform his usual heavy equipment position following the March 1997 neck surgery. Defendant's Motion, Ex. A, at 20-21.

No retaliatory inference can be gleaned from Plaintiff's allegation concerning the "denial of a light duty assignment" given Plaintiff's own deposition testimony reflecting the absence of medical restrictions placed on Plaintiff and the discretionary nature and short length of "light duty" assignments given other co-workers.

Plaintiff next alleges that the "denial of air-ride-suspension truck" supports his retaliation claim. Plaintiff avers in his responsive affidavit that Tom Howard and "Breakbill" are assigned to trucks equipped with air-ride-suspension. However, again, Plaintiff makes no specific allegations as to when the "denial" occurred or who participated this alleged adverse action. Plaintiff also does not allege that such an accommodation was given to other co-workers as a result of an injury. In Plaintiff's deposition testimony, he stated that no work restrictions were placed on him by his treating physician after his March 1997 neck surgery. There is substantial evidence that operating heavy equipment such as cranes was a normal part of Plaintiff's job as well as the jobs of other OG&E employees having the same position as the Plaintiff. Under these circumstances, no inference of retaliation is shown by Plaintiff's allegation of a "denial of air-ride-suspension truck."

Plaintiff next alleges that retaliation is shown by Singleton's order to Plaintiff to drive the 75-ton road crane. Plaintiff's deposition testimony, discussed hereinabove, concerning the reasons given by Singleton for the directive to drive the crane, does not create any inference of retaliation. Plaintiff testified that driving cranes was a normal part of his job and all of the employees in his division were expected to "fill [ ] in" for the two regular crane operators when necessary and that he had previously driven this particular road crane with no physical repercussions. Moreover, summary judgment had been granted in OG&E's favor immediately prior to this work directive, and Plaintiff does not present any facts from which it can be inferred that Singleton was even aware of Plaintiff's deposition testimony. See Shinwari v. Raytheon Aircraft Co., No. 98-3324, 2000 WL 731782, *7 (10th Cir. June 8, 2000) ("protected activity cannot bear a causal relationship to adverse action if those taking the action were unaware of the existence of the protected activity").

Plaintiff's allegation that he was "denied the right to file a workers' compensation claim" contradicts his deposition testimony, and therefore this allegation does not create an issue of fact. Plaintiff's deposition testimony, in which he stated he had never inquired into or been denied the right to file a workers' compensation claim, creates no inference of retaliation.

Plaintiff next alleges that he was denied the right to work for two weeks in a light duty assignment following the August 21, 1997 injury. Plaintiff points to his doctor's statement dated August 26, 1997, that Plaintiff was restricted to light duty work for two weeks. Plaintiff's Response, Ex. 7, at 2, Plaintiff avers in his responsive affidavit that he took this doctor's note to Singleton, Singleton discussed the note with his supervisor, Mr. Newton, Singleton then advised Plaintiff that OG&E would accept the doctor's restriction and place Plaintiff on light duty, and because "he did not have any light duty for me" Plaintiff was sent home that day. Plaintiff's Response, Ex. 1, at 4. Although Plaintiff testified in his deposition that some co-workers had been placed on light duty assignments following injuries, his deposition testimony clearly showed that such assignments were extended to some employees for short periods of time within the discretion of the supervisor of the heavy equipment division. Plaintiff's testimony and affidavit reflect that at most he may have had a subjective expectation that he would be placed on light duty. There is no evidence sufficient to create any inference of a causal connection between the alleged adverse employment action of not placing Plaintiff on light duty following his August 21, 1997 injury and his deposition testimony in the Riffel case. Again, Plaintiff does not allege that Singleton was aware of the deposition testimony, and none of Singleton's statements, as testified to by Plaintiff, indicate Singleton's awareness of Plaintiff's assistance in Riffel.

Plaintiff alleges in his Complaint that his termination also supports his claim of retaliation under the ADEA. Plaintiff does not renew this allegation in response to Defendant's disposition Motion. In Plaintiff's deposition, Plaintiff testified that his request to be reinstated to his previous job was denied on or about May 24, 1999, because there was no work he could perform with his medical restrictions. Defendant's Motion, Ex. C, at 100; Defendant's Reply, Ex. B, at 5. Although Plaintiff testified there were jobs at OG&E that could have been performed with his medical restrictions, Plaintiff conceded that he had never applied for any other jobs at the company and did not know if any jobs were open at the time his request for reinstatement was denied. Defendant's Motion, Ex. C, at 101. Plaintiff also conceded that at that time he had not been released for "full duty" by his physician. Id. at 5-6. In fact, Plaintiff testified in his deposition that after he went on disability, his supervisor, Mr. Singleton, had telephoned him and "said they were looking for a position that I could do" with Plaintiff's medical restrictions, but Plaintiff never called him back. Defendant's Reply, Ex. B, at 102. The Tenth Circuit's decision in the Riffel matter was entered in May 1998, a year before Plaintiff's request for reinstatement was denied.

Appendix B

No discriminatory animus can be inferred from the adverse employment action. There is no evidence of statements or conduct indicating a causal connection between Plaintiff's request for reinstatement and the appellate court decision in Riffel. Accordingly, Defendant is entitled to summary judgment on Plaintiff's retaliation claim.

Based on the foregoing reasons, Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment (Doc. #26) is GRANTED. Judgment shall issue accordingly.

IT IS SO ORDERED this 17th day of July, 2000.

STATUTES:

29 U.S.C. §§ 621, et seq. 2

29 U.S.C. § 1140 2

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Petitioner, David Tinkle, contends that he was the target of retaliation after he gave testimony by deposition in the case styled Don Riffel v. Oklahoma Gas and Electric Company, United States District Court for the Western District of Oklahoma, Case No. CIV-96-1179-A. Petitioner had neck surgery in March 1997 and was medically released to return to work in the Heavy Hauling Department at Oklahoma Gas and Electric Company ("OG&E") on June 2, 1997. On June 6, 1997, Petitioner gave his deposition in the Riffel case. On August 21, 1997, after returning to work with no medical restrictions, Petitioner re-injured his neck while driving a crane and was off work, first on sick leave, then short-term disability leave and finally on long-term disability.

Petitioner was not fired from his position by his supervisor, John Singleton. After he re-injured his neck in August 1997, Petitioner was never medically released to return to his job in the Heavy Hauling Department. Petitioner applied for and received long-term disability benefits from American Fidelity, the separate company administering long-term disability benefits. After several months, American Fidelity decided to terminate Petitioner's long-term disability benefits because he did not meet the criteria for continued benefits under the terms of the written ERISA plan. Petitioner was removed from the OG&E payroll after his long-term disability benefits were terminated by American Fidelity in 1999 and he had provided no medical clearance to return to work. Petitioner subsequently applied for reinstatement to his former position in the Heavy Hauling Department in May, 1999. This request was denied, however, because Petitioner did not produce a medical release (requested by OG&E) showing he was medically able to return to his former duties. Petitioner did not apply for other jobs at OG&E and is currently not employed by OG&E.

Petitioner filed suit on August 4, 1999, in the United States District Court for the Western District of Oklahoma ("District Court") alleging interference with his right to receive benefits in violation of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act ("ERISA"), 29 U.S.C. § 1140; intentional or negligent infliction of mental and/or emotional distress; violation of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act ("ADEA"), 29 U.S.C. §§ 621, et seq. and retaliation for participation in an enforcement action under the ADEA. The District Court granted OG&E's Motion for Summary Judgment on each of Petitioner's claims. Petitioner lodged an appeal from the final Order of the District Court, alleging that the District Court abused its discretion in granting OG&E's Motion for Summary Judgment on the retaliation claim under the ADEA. The Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals determined that the only claim preserved for appeal was that for retaliation and affirmed the District Court's ruling on the ADEA retaliation claim. (Pet. App. A at 2a.)

REASON FOR DENYING THE WRIT

To establish a prima facie case of retaliation under the ADEA, a plaintiff must show: (1) that he or she was engaged in protected opposition to age discrimination; (2) that he or she was subjected to an adverse employment action; and (3) that a causal connection existed between the protected activity and the adverse employment action. See Sanchez v. Denver Public Schools, 164 F.3d 527, 533 (10th Cir. 1998). For the first time in this litigation, Petitioner argues that the second element of a retaliation claim – the occurrence of an adverse employment action – should be determined according to the hostile work environment standards articulated in Burlington Industries v. Ellerth, 524 U.S. 742, 118 S.Ct. 2268 (1998); Faragher v. City of Boca Raton, 524 U.S. 775, 118 S.Ct. 2275 (1998); Oncale v. Sundowner Offshore Services, Inc., 523 U.S. 75, 118 S.Ct. 998 (1998); and Harris v. Forklift Systems, Inc., 510 U.S. 17, 114 S.Ct. 367 (1993). (Petition at 8.) None of these decisions were cited in Petitioner's Response to Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment and Brief in Support or in Petitioner's Brief to the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals. Obviously, the courts below should not be charged with error for "failure" to apply standards not articulated, or even suggested, to those courts in any of Petitioner's pleadings. See Weiss v. Duro Chrome Corp., 207 F.2d 298, 300 (8th Cir. 1953). ("The trial court having had no opportunity of passing upon the question now for the first time presented cannot be charged with error for failing to do that which it was not requested to do.") See also Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. S.E.K. Const. Co., 436 F.2d 1345, 1352 (10th Cir. 1971); Hanley v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 433 F.2d 708, 711 (10th Cir. 1970); and U.S. v. Gates, 376 F.2d 65, 75 (10th Cir. 1967).

The complained-of conduct here, even if "taken as a whole" as urged by Petitioner, does not rise to the level of actionable harassment under the standards articulated in Harris, Faragher, Ellerth and Oncale. (Proposition 3, infra.) Even if it did, Petitioner still cannot establish an essential element of a prima facie case of retaliation. Both the District Court and the Court of Appeals found that Petitioner had made no showing of the third element of his retaliation claim – a causal connection between an adverse employment action and his protected activities under the ADEA. In the absence of any evidence that Petitioner's supervisor, John Singleton, the alleged retaliatory actor, was even aware that Petitioner had participated in Riffel's ADEA action, Petitioner did not, and cannot, make a prima facie showing of retaliation. (Proposition 2, infra.)

Application of the hostile work environment standards of Harris, Faragher, Ellerth and Oncale cannot affect the ultimate outcome of this case. Petitioner has no evidence of the third element of an ADEA retaliation claim – a causal connection between his participation in the Riffel suit and the complained-of actions allegedly taken by his supervisor. Therefore any determination by the Court on that issue would be, in effect, an impermissible advisory opinion. See, e.g., U.S. v. Fruehauf, 365 U.S. 146, 157, 815 S.Ct. 547, 553-54 (1961) and Secretary of Agriculture v. Central Roig Refining Co., 338 U.S. 604, 619-20, 70 S.Ct. 403, 411 (1950). Petitioner's Petition for a Writ of Certiorari should be denied.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Petitioner once again attempts to secure review in this case based on "facts" not in evidence. A review of the proceedings below shows that Petitioner has no evidence that he "begged" his supervisor to not force him to drive a crane because of neck problems (Petition at 10), no evidence that his supervisor, John Singleton, advised him not to file a workers' compensation claim (Petition at 6-7) and no evidence that he "enjoyed a complaint free employment environment prior to his participation in the Riffel case." (Petition at 12.)

Attached to Petitioner's Response to OG&E's Motion for Summary Judgment was an affidavit containing several statements contrary to Petitioner's earlier sworn deposition testimony. The District Court ruled that because Petitioner did not explain the contradiction between the statements in his affidavit and those in his deposition testimony, Petitioner had not created a material issue of fact with his contradictory affidavit. (Pet. App. B at 17a.) In his opening brief to the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals, Petitioner again attempted to put forth evidence by means of statements in this responsive affidavit that contradicted his earlier sworn testimony. And again, Petitioner offered no explanation for the contradictions. The Tenth Circuit held that the magistrate judge had "properly disregarded statements in plaintiff's affidavit that contradicted his earlier sworn deposition testimony." (Pet. App. A at 4a.)

Petitioner alleges that he "begged" of his supervisor that he not be made to drive the "75-Ton Road Crane" because of his neck, but that his request was denied. (Petition at 10.) According to his deposition testimony, the conversation about the assignment to drive the crane went quite differently. Petitioner testified in his deposition that he told his supervisor, John Singleton, that he did not need to be in the crane because he "knew how to run it" and that Singleton's response was that Petitioner needed the experience and was being paid to drive all of the equipment in his department and needed to do all the work that was required. (Pet. App. B at 17a; Res. App. at 14-15, 21.) According to his own testimony, Petitioner never said to his supervisor anything along the lines of "I'm afraid I'm going to get hurt if I drive the crane." (Pet. App. B at 17a; Res. App. at 15, 21.)

Petitioner also alleges that his supervisor, John Singleton, advised him not to file a workers' compensation claim. (Petition at 6-7.) Again, Petitioner contradicts his own deposition testimony. At his sworn deposition, Petitioner testified that he was never told by anyone that he could not file for workers' compensation and conceded that it was he who made the decision not to file a workers' compensation claim, but to file an insurance claim instead. (Pet. App. B at 20a, 25a; Res. App. at 3-4, 19-20.) He further testified that he did not talk with his doctor or ask anyone about filing a workers' compensation claim. (Res. App. at 3-4, 19-20.)

Nowhere in the record or in his Petition does Petitioner explain the blatant contradictions between his sworn deposition testimony and the facts alleged in his affidavit. As discussed in Proposition 1, infra, the District Court and the Court of Appeals were correct to conclude that Petitioner's affidavit was an attempt to create a sham fact issue and to disregard the purported "evidence" put forth therein. This Court should also disregard the "evidence" brought into the record via the contradictory statements in Petitioner's affidavit.

Petitioner makes the conclusory allegation that he was "illegally placed on short-term/long-term disability," but offers no evidence in support of his contention. (Petition at 6 n. 3.) Nor does Petitioner have evidence to support his allegations that Singleton "conditioned Tinkle's return on being able to drive the 75-Ton Road Crane" or that "Singleton intentionally kept Tinkle away for a period sufficient for 'short term' disability to 'kick in.' " (Petition at 6 n. 3.) The District Court found no "material issue of fact as to whether OG&E interfered with Plaintiff's disability benefits . . . . " (Pet. App. B at 26a-27a.)

Petitioner did not present the issue of the alleged "illegality" of being placed on short-term disability to the Court of Appeals. (Pet. App. A at 2a.) Petitioner has thus "waived and abandoned" this issue for the purposes of appeal. See Bodry v. United Airlines, Inc., 58 F.3d 1483, 1490 (10th Cir. 1995). Nor did Petitioner appeal to the Tenth Circuit his ERISA claim concerning the alleged interference with his disability benefits. (Pet. App. A at 2a.) Accordingly, this Court should disregard Petitioner's allegation that the District Court improperly considered "evidence that a jury would not be required to see or believe, such as investigatory or inquiry type letters from plaintiff's counsel to the insurance carrier regarding long term disability benefit [sic] of plaintiff." (Petition at 11.)

Disregarding those "facts" that contradict Petitioner's sworn deposition testimony and those allegations for which there is no factual support, the facts in evidence relevant to the correctness of the rulings below on Petitioner's retaliation claim under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, are as follows:

(1) Driving a 75-ton road crane was a normal part of the job duties of Petitioner and other members of the

Heavy Hauling Department at OG&E. (Pet. App. B at 30a; Res. App. at 13-14, 21);

(2) In 1997, when he was assigned to drive the crane, Petitioner had been released back to work by his doctor with no medical restrictions. (Pet. App. B at 17a; Res. App. at 14, 21-22, 33);

(3) When Petitioner was assigned by his supervisor to drive the crane, he did not inform his supervisor that he was concerned about possible re-injury of his neck. (Pet. App. B at 17a, 30a; Res. App. at 14-15, 21);

(4) Petitioner started keeping notes at work in 1985 because he felt like he was being harassed. Petitioner felt as early as 1985 that John Singleton (who was not then his supervisor) was out to get him. Petitioner took notes because he was questioned about work-related issues and he wanted to be able to prove that he was doing his job. According to Petitioner, John Singleton harassed him and "anyone he wants to." (Pet. App. B at 8a-9a,[1] 16a-17a);

(5) After Petitioner re-injured his neck on August 21, 1997, he was never released by his doctor to return to full duty of his position in the Heavy Hauling Department at OG&E. (Pet. App. B at 9a; Res. App. at 4-6, 27-30);

(6) When Petitioner attempted to return to his former position at OG&E in May 1999, he had not been released to full-duty by his doctor. (Pet. App. B at 10a; Res. App. at 4-6, 25);

[1] Petitioner's Appendix B, p. 8a, ¶5 contains a typographical error. The original Order reflects Petitioner's deposition testimony that he began keeping notes in 1985 rather than 1995. See Pet. App. B at 16a.

(7) The most recent medical information Petitioner submitted to OG&E was dated April 5, 1999, and signed by Dr. Schimandle. Petitioner remained under the following restrictions: no lifting or carrying of more than 25 pounds; no repetitive use of the hands, wrists, or fingers; and no operating of heavy equipment. (Pet. App. B at 10a; Res. App. at 4-5, 27-30);

(8) Because of Petitioner's medical restrictions, he could not return to his previous job in the Heavy Hauling Department at OG&E. Petitioner never applied for any other positions at OG&E. (Pet. App. B at 10a; Res. App. at 35-36.)

ARGUMENT

THE LOWER COURTS CORRECTLY DISREGARDED STATEMENTS IN PETITIONER'S AFFIDAVIT CONTRARY TO SWORN DEPOSITION TESTIMONY.

Attached to his Response to OG&E's Motion for Summary Judgment to the District Court was an affidavit by Petitioner containing several statements contrary to his sworn deposition testimony. Citing Franks v. Nimmo, 796 F.2d 1230, 1237 (10th Cir. 1986),[2] the District Court ruled

[2] In Franks v. Nimmo, the court held that an affidavit conflicting with the affiant's prior sworn statements may be disregarded if the court concludes that the affidavit is merely an attempt to create a sham fact issue. Factors relevant to this determination include whether the affiant had access to pertinent evidence at the time of the prior testimony and that because Petitioner did not explain the contradiction between the statements in his affidavit and those in his deposition testimony, he had not created a material issue of fact with his contradictory affidavit. (Pet. App. B at 17a, 36a.) In his opening brief to the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals Petitioner again attempted to put forth evidence by means of statements in his responsive affidavit that contradicted his earlier sworn testimony, again, without any explanation of the blatant contradictions between his sworn testimony and the statements in his affidavit. Citing Kendrick v. Penske Transp. Servs., Inc., 220 F.3d 1220, 1224 (10th Cir. 2000),[3] the Tenth Circuit determined that the "magistrate judge properly disregarded statements in Plaintiff's affidavit that contradicted his earlier sworn deposition testimony." (Pet. App. A at 4a.)

This Court, in Cleveland v. Policy Management Systems Corp., 526 U.S. 795, 806-807, 119 S.Ct. 1597, 1603-04 (1999) agreed with the approach taken in Franks v. Nimmo and similar cases from other circuits where courts "have held with virtual unanimity that a party cannot create a genuine issue of fact sufficient to survive summary judgment simply by contradicting his or her own previous sworn statement (by, say, filing a later affidavit that flatly contradicts that party's earlier sworn deposition) without whether the earlier testimony reflects confusion that the affidavit attempts to explain. Franks, 796 F.2d at 1237.

[3] In Kendrick, the Tenth Circuit cited its earlier decision in Franks v. Nimmo to disregard an affidavit that was not based on evidence unavailable to the affiant at the time of the earlier sworn deposition and where the affidavit did not appear to be an attempt to clarify confusing testimony given at the deposition.

explaining the contradiction or attempting to resolve the disparity." This is just such a case. Nowhere in the record or in the current Petition is there any indication that Petitioner's affidavit was an attempt to clarify confusing testimony or any evidence that the affidavit reflected information not available to Petitioner at the time his deposition testimony was given. Therefore, this Court should also disregard the "evidence" brought into the record through Petitioner's contradictory affidavit. Specifically, the Court should disregard: (1) evidence that Petitioner "begged" his supervisor not to drive the road crane because he feared he would injure his neck (Petition at 10); and (2) Petitioner's contention that his supervisor advised him not to file a workers' compensation claim. (Petition at 6-7).

PETITIONER HAS NOT MADE A PRIMA FACIE CASE OF RETALIATION IN THE ABSENCE OF EVIDENCE THAT HIS SUPERVISOR WAS AWARE OF PETITIONER'S PROTECTED ACTIVITY.

To make a prima facie case of retaliation for participation in protected activity under the ADEA, a plaintiff must show: "(1) protected opposition to discrimination or participation in a proceeding arising out of discrimination; (2) adverse action by the employer contemporaneously or subsequent to the employee's protected activity; and (3) a causal connection between such activity and the employer's action." Anderson v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 861 F.2d 631, 634 (10th Cir. 1988) (citing Burrus v. United Tel. Co. of Kansas, Inc., 683 F.2d 339, 343 (10th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 459 U.S. 1071, 103 S.Ct. 491 (1982)). Petitioner has failed to establish the requisite causal connection between any allegedly "adverse" employment actions and his participation in the Riffel lawsuit. Petitioner put forth no evidence whatsoever indicating that his supervisor, John Singleton, was aware of the alleged telephone conversation between Petitioner and the attorney representing OG&E in Don Riffel's ADEA action or was aware that Petitioner gave deposition testimony that he believes was adverse to OG&E. (Pet. App. A at 4a; Pet. App. B at 35a-37a.)

Absent any evidence that Singleton was aware of Petitioner's deposition, its content, or of Petitioner's telephone conversation with OG&E's counsel, there is no evidence from which a jury could reasonably infer a causal connection between Petitioner's protected activities and any of the "adverse actions" alleged by Petitioner. See Anderson v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 861 F.2d 631, 635 (10th Cir. 1988) (citing Guenther v. County of Washington, 623 F.2d 1303, 1316 (9th Cir. 1979), aff'd, 452 U.S. 161, 101 S.Ct. 2242 (1981) (no evidence to infer individual responsible for adverse decision actually knew of employees' protected activity; therefore, Petitioners did not prove necessary link between their activity and Defendant's adverse action that would establish prima facie case)). See also Williams v. Rice, 983 F.2d 177, 181 (10th Cir. 1993) (removed employee failed to establish prima facie case of retaliation where employee failed to provide any evidence that supervisor who made decision to remove employee was aware of complaints made by the employee to the EEOC); McCollum v. Bolger, 794 F.2d 602, 610-611 (11th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, McCollum v. Tisch, 479 U.S. 1034, 107 S.Ct. 883 (1987) (rescheduling of employee's work could not have been retaliation for participation in Title VII proceeding where supervisor making the rescheduling decision did not know of employee's participation); Talley v. United States Postal Service, 720 F.2d 505, 508 (8th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 466 U.S. 952, 104 S.Ct. 2155 (1984) (discharge of USPS employee was not retaliatory where supervisor who discharged employee was not aware of employee's complaints concerning racial discrimination).

Petitioner must have some evidence beyond an allegedly "adverse" action subsequent to his protected activity in order to show the required knowledge. In Anderson, the court found that the plaintiff had established the causal link needed for a prima facie case of retaliation where the claimed retaliatory conduct was failure to hire the plaintiff at another company-owned facility during the pending shut down of the facility where he worked. There, the plaintiff had evidence that a supervisor in the company's central personnel clearinghouse sometimes communicated adverse job-related information by telephone to potential hiring locations within the company. See Anderson, supra, 861 F.2d at 635. The Court held that this was evidence from which the jury could infer that individual decision makers were aware that Anderson had filed an age discrimination claim. Id.

By contrast, in Guenther, jail matrons alleged that certain "adverse" actions were taken by the Sheriff after they made equal pay claims. The Ninth Circuit found no prima facie case where the matrons could not show that the Sheriff was aware of their equal pay claims:

> Only if there is evidence that the Sheriff actually knew that the plaintiffs raised such claims, rather than other matrons, can we infer that the Sheriff gave negative recommendations to the plaintiffs and positive recommendations to the other matrons for vindictive reasons. The plaintiffs presented no such evidence.

Guenther, supra, 623 F.2d at 1316.

Here, the District Court found that Petitioner did not "present any facts from which it can be inferred that Singleton was even aware of Plaintiff's deposition testimony." (Pet. App. B at 35a.) The Tenth Circuit upheld this finding:

> Plaintiff also failed to present evidence that a causal connection existed between his participation in the Riffel case and the alleged adverse employment actions. He presented no evidence that Singleton had any knowledge that Plaintiff was a witness in the Riffel case, had refused to cooperate with an OG&E attorney or had given deposition testimony implicating Singleton.

(Pet. App. A at 4a.)

Petitioner argues that the District Court's finding that there was no evidence that Singleton was aware of Petitioner's deposition testimony "presupposes that a reasonable factfinder could not infer that: (1) Tinkle's assignment to drive the 75-Ton Road Crane; (2) Tinkles [sic] resultant injury; (3) Singleton's failure to allow Tinkle to file a workers' compensation claim; and (4) Tinkle's ultimate termination was caused by Tinkle's testimony against Singleton." (Petition at 23.) Even assuming that these actions could be retaliatory, which Defendant asserts they are not, Petitioner is asking this Court to infer from that assumption that Petitioner's supervisor must have known about Petitioner's protected activities.

As Guenther and the other cases cited above make clear, a plaintiff cannot rely upon the courts to infer an element of a prima facie case on which the plaintiff has not met his or her burden of producing evidence. (Pet. App. A at 4a.) Petitioner failed to meet the burden of presenting the District Court with either direct evidence that his supervisor was aware of his protected activities (e.g., Singleton making comments about the Riffel case) or facts from which that knowledge could be inferred (e.g., Singleton's attendance at a meeting or receipt of a report where the Riffel case was discussed). It is simply not enough to ask the Court to assume that Singleton was aware of the protected activities based on the allegedly retaliatory actions taken by Singleton. See Guenther, 623 F.2d at 1316. Because Petitioner cannot show a prima facie case of retaliation in violation of the ADEA, the Petition for Writ of Certiorari should be denied.

PROPOSITION 3

PETITIONER HAS NOT SHOWN THAT HE WAS SUBJECTED TO "SEVERE OR PERVASIVE" RETALIATORY HARASSMENT.

For the first time in this litigation, Petitioner argues that the second element of a retaliation claim – the occurrence of an adverse employment action – should be determined according to the standards articulated in Reeves v.

Sanderson Plumbing Products, Inc., 530 U.S. 133, 120 S.Ct. 2097 (2000); Burlington Industries v. Ellerth, 524 U.S. 742, 118 S.Ct. 2268 (1998); Faragher v. City of Boca Raton, 524 U.S. 775, 118 S.Ct. 2275 (1998); Oncale v. Sundowner Offshore Services, Inc., 523 U.S. 75, 118 S.Ct. 998 (1998); and Harris v. Forklift Systems, Inc., 510 U.S. 17, 114 S.Ct. 367 (1993). (Petition at 8.) Ellerth, Faragher, Harris and Oncale each address sexual harassment claims, while Reeves addresses evidentiary burdens in the context of an age discrimination claim. None specifically address retaliation claims, either under Title VII or the ADEA. Petitioner appears to be arguing that harassment that creates a "hostile" or "abusive" work environment can be actionable as unlawful retaliation under the ADEA. However, Petitioner cites no authority for the proposition that the analysis of the "hostile work environment" found in these cases is applicable to an ADEA retaliation claim.

Assuming, for the sake of argument only, that these standards are applicable to such a claim, Petitioner has failed to put forth any evidence that he was subjected to harassment so "severe or pervasive" that it amounted to an actionable adverse employment action. In Harris v. Forklift Systems, Inc., this Court held that to be actionable under Title VII as an "abusive work environment," the racial or sexual harassment must be shown to create an objectively hostile or abusive environment. In addition, there must be a showing that the plaintiff actually did perceive the environment as abusive or hostile. 510 U.S. 17, 24, 114 S.Ct. 367, 371 (1993). Stating that discriminatory conduct "so severe or pervasive that it created a work environment abusive to employees because of their race, gender, religion or national origin offends Title VII's broad rule of work place equality," the Court noted that the two-pronged test it enunciated "cannot be a mathematically precise test." Id. This Court did, however, in the context of racial and gender harassment, provide the following guidance:

> But we can say that whether an environment is "hostile" or "abusive" can be determined only by looking at all of the circumstances. These may include the frequency of the discriminatory conduct; its severity; whether it is physically threatening or humiliating, or a mere offensive utterance; and whether it unreasonably interferes with an employee's work performance. The effect on the employee's psychological well being is, of course, relevant to determining whether the plaintiff actually found the environment abusive. But while psychological harm, like any other relevant factor, may be taken into account, no single factor is required.

Id.

Petitioner argues that OG&E "intentionally subjected him to physical harm" via the order to drive the road crane. (Petition at 2.) Petitioner also implies that the order to drive the road crane was negligent:

> Despite the fact that Tinkle suffered injury as a result of a work assignment, given to him by his supervisor, and it was foreseeable that the assignment would cause the injury that did in fact result, both Courts held that those allegations did not state a 'adverse employment action' under the first prong of Sanchez.

(Petition at 16.) Concerning any claim for the injury itself, the District Court correctly found that Petitioner's "sole remedy" for "negligent injury under the facts alleged" is the Oklahoma Workers' Compensation Act at Title 85 of the Oklahoma statutes. (Pet. App. B at 29a.) Petitioner offers no argument or evidence to refute the District Court's holding in this regard.

If, on the other hand, Petitioner is relying on the theory that his injury in the crane was the intended result when Singleton ordered Petitioner to drive the crane, Petitioner's only viable claim would be against John Singleton individually, rather than against OG&E. The general rule is that an agent's tortious or criminal assault upon another cannot be considered within the scope of the agent's authority, unless the assault could have been "anticipated by the employer" as a foreseeable means of accomplishing the job for which the agent was employed. Clark v. Brien, 59 F.3d 1082, 1087 (10th Cir. 1995) (citing, inter alia, Allison v. Gilmore, Gardner & Kirk, Inc., 350 P.2d 287, 290-92 (Okla. 1960)).

In Allison, the court held the employer was not liable when an employee had an altercation with a third party who challenged the way the employee was doing his job. See also Tulsa General Drivers Union v. Conley, 288 P.2d 750, 753 (Okla. 1985) ("It is not, as a general rule, within the scope of the servant's employment to commit an assault upon a third person and the master is not liable for such an assault, though committed while the servant was about his master's business."). There is no evidence that Petitioner's injury in the crane was the result of negligent or intentionally harmful conduct on Singleton's part. Nor has Petitioner put forth evidence that any intentional assault against him by Singleton could have been "anticipated" by OG&E.

The complained-of assignment to drive a crane from Ardmore, Oklahoma, to Oklahoma City (approximately 80 miles) came on August 21, 1997, after Petitioner had been medically released to full duty subsequent to his neck surgery in March, 1997. (Pet. App. B at 17a; Res. App. at 13-14, 20-22, 33.)[4] As discussed in Proposition 1, supra, there is simply no evidence in the record that Petitioner "begged Singleton to not force him to drive 80 miles in the 75-Ton Road Crane." (Petition at 10; Pet. App. B at 17a, 29a-31a.) According to Petitioner's sworn deposition testimony, when assigned to drive the crane Petitioner made only a vague statement to his supervisor about already knowing how to run it. The supervisor responded that Petitioner was expected to perform all of the tasks for which he was being paid:

> I told John [Singleton] that I did not think I should be in it [the crane], that I knew how to run it. And he said, "you need the experience and you're going to drive it." And I said, "I

[4] Petitioner alleges that the "District Court erroneously misstates the time and substance of Plaintiff's claim by stating: 'these allegations involve actions taken more than two years after the alleged statements by Singleton . . . . ' " (Petition at 12 n.7.) That statement by the District Court was made in the context of its discussion of whether comments allegedly made by John Singleton about Petitioner's co-worker, Don Riffel, constituted direct evidence of age discrimination by John Singleton against Petitioner. In that context, the Court correctly pointed out that the comments had allegedly occurred in March, 1995, and none of the allegedly discriminatory actions of which Petitioner was complaining in his own suit occurred until 1997. (Pet. App. B at 13a and 14a.) In any event, Petitioner has waived his age discrimination claim under the ADEA for purposes of appeal. (Pet. App. A at 2a.) > know how to drive it." He said, "you're being paid top pay to do everything. You will drive it back from Ardmore."

(Pet. App. B at 30a; Res. App. at 21.)

Petitioner alleges that one of the "two other persons who were assigned to drive the 75-Ton Road Crane were present" at the time he was assigned to drive the Crane and "one stated that he would drive instead of Tinkle." (Petition at 19.) Petitioner's deposition testimony indicates that this offer was made to Petitioner, that the offer was not communicated to Petitioner's supervisor, John Singleton, and that Petitioner declined the offer. (Res. App. at 33.) In addition, Petitioner's deposition testimony shows that on a previous occasion when he had been ordered to drive the same crane by Singleton, he had made no complaint of any physical discomfort:

> Q. Well, when you drove it from Oklahoma City to Shawnee [Oklahoma], when you got back to work that day, did you tell him, John, I had a hard time, I couldn't do it, don't ever give me that job again, or I was able to do it? Did you give him any information about that job?
> A. No.

(Res. App. at 32.) Given that Petitioner cannot show that Singleton was aware Petitioner was concerned about re-injury of his neck while driving the crane, the lower courts were correct in not considering "Tinkle's perception of fear of re-injury to his neck." (Petition at 10.) In the absence of awareness by Singleton of that fear, it is simply not logically relevant to whether the assignment to drive the crane was an "abusive" act.

The evidence below was that driving this crane was part of the normal duties of Petitioner and other members of the Heavy Hauling Department. (Pet. App. B at 35a; Res. App. at 21.)[5] On the day he was ordered to drive the crane, August 21, 1997, Petitioner had been medically released to full duty in the Heavy Hauling Department with no restrictions regarding operating or driving any specific pieces of equipment. (Pet. App. B at 35a; Res. App. at 33.) Petitioner introduced no evidence below that other members of his department had been injured while driving the crane. Petitioner refused to allow a co-worker to drive the crane on the day that he was injured. (Res. App. at 32-33.) Given these facts – that the Petitioner was medically released to work with no restrictions and that no one told Petitioner's supervisor that Petitioner was concerned about re-injury to his neck – the assignment to do a job required of members of Petitioner's department, cannot reasonably be characterized as "abusive."

Likewise, neither the denial of Petitioner's request to be assigned to a truck with "air-ride suspension" nor the denial of a long-term "light-duty" assignment constitute actionable acts of workplace abuse or harassment. The District Court correctly noted that "there is no evidence all employees in Plaintiff's work group received 'light-duty' assignments following injuries." (Pet. App. B at

[5] Contrary to Petitioner's contention that "the lower courts did not consider the distinction between . . . 'operating' a crane versus 'driving' a crane eighty (80) miles . . . ," the District Court specifically addressed the evidence concerning the number of employees in the Heavy Hauling Department who had driven the crane. (Petition at 14; Pet. App. B at 17a-18a, 35a.)

33a-34a.) Petitioner's evidence concerning "light-duty" assignments merely indicates that some individuals were given various light-duty assignments for varying lengths of time. (Pet. App. A at 4a; Pet. App. B at 34a.) In fact, after a portion of the protected activity which Petitioner alleges resulted in retaliation – the conversation with OG&E's lawyer and the Riffel case in March, 1997 – Petitioner was given a two-day light-duty assignment. (Res. App. at 20.)

Because of the discretionary nature of light-duty assignments as reflected in Plaintiff's evidence, the District Court determined that "no retaliatory inference can be gleaned from Plaintiff's allegation concerning the 'denial of a light-duty assignment' given Plaintiff's own deposition testimony reflecting the absence of medical restrictions placed on Plaintiff and the discretionary nature and short length of 'light-duty' assignments given other co-workers." (Pet. App. B at 34a.) Just as no "retaliatory" inference can be gleaned from Petitioner's evidence, no jury could reasonably find that denial of "light duty" constituted "abuse" under the standards set forth in Harris, supra, 510 U.S. at 24.

The same analysis applies to the denial of assignment to a truck equipped with "air-ride suspension." Petitioner did not show that other Heavy Hauling Department workers were assigned to such trucks as an accommodation for back, neck or any other type of injury. (Pet. App. B at 35a.) There was no evidence that such assignments were routinely, or even occasionally, assigned based on physical limitations. Nor was there evidence that the assignment of trucks equipped with "air-ride suspension" was ever made in response to a request by an employee. In the absence of such evidence, it is not possible to infer that the denial of this request was part of a pattern of retaliatory abuse.

Again, assuming for the sake of argument only, that the hostile work environment standards set forth in Ellerth, Faragher, Oncale and Harris are applicable to Petitioner's retaliation claim under the ADEA, Petitioner has failed to show that he was subjected to an abusive or hostile work environment subsequent to his participation in the Riffel lawsuit. Under the objective prong of the test articulated in Harris, the events about which Petitioner complains – assignment to drive a crane, denial of his request to be assigned at all times to a truck with air-ride suspension, and receipt of disability benefits rather than assignment to "light-duty" – even if taken as a whole, (as Petitioner argues should have been done under "an Oncale analysis,") do not add up to an "abusive" or "hostile" work environment. (Petition at 16.)[6]

Petitioner's complaint appears to be that he was abused because he was not given special treatment that he requested. As the District Court noted, "Plaintiff apparently believes special accommodations should have been made as a result of his neck and back injuries, but he fails to demonstrate that a disputed issue of fact exists with regard to the motivation of the supervisor in refusing to make these special accommodations." (Pet. App. B at 18a.) In the absence of evidence that similarly situated employees (i.e., employees who were medically released to full duty but still concerned about some aspect of their health) were given the requested accommodations, Petitioner cannot show that he was treated differently than his co-workers, let alone forced to work in an "abusive" or "hostile" environment.

[6] As discussed in Proposition 1, supra, Petitioner introduced no evidence below that he was denied his right to file a workers' compensation claim by OG&E.

This Court has made clear that not all workplace conflicts are actionable under federal anti-discrimination statutes. Oncale, supra, 523 U.S. at 79-80 (citing Harris, 510 U.S. at 21, 1145 S.Ct. at 370). Petitioner argues that his work environment became hostile or abusive subsequent to his participation in the Riffel lawsuit; that his supervisor had an angry tone and gave him less time to complete paperwork. (Petition at 4.) Contrary to Petitioner's claim that he "enjoyed a complaint free employment environment prior to his participation in the Riffel case," the evidence indicates a long-term history of conflict between Petitioner and John Singleton. (Petition at 12; Pet. App. B at 16a-17a.) Petitioner testified that he started keeping notes at work in 1985 because he felt like John Singleton (who was not then his supervisor) was out to get him (Pet. App. B at 16a-17a). Petitioner testified that he took these notes because he was questioned about work-related issues and he wanted to be able to prove that he was doing his job. According to Petitioner's testimony, John Singleton harassed him and "anyone he wants to." (Pet. App. B at 8a-9a and 16a-17a; Res. App. at 2.) Against this backdrop of long-term conflict between Petitioner and John Singleton, it is simply not possible to reasonably infer that the denial of two requests for discretionary benefits and an assignment to do a normal job in the Heavy Hauling Department constitute harassment in retaliation for participation in the Riffel suit in 1997.

Even if the complained-of events did rise to the level of actionable harassment under "an Oncale analysis," Petitioner can still make no prima facie showing that any of Singleton's actions were taken in response to Petitioner's participation in the Riffel suit. There is simply no evidence in the record that Singleton was aware of Petitioner's conversation with OG&E's counsel in the Riffel suit or was aware of Petitioner's deposition testimony. Without such evidence, Petitioner cannot show the required third element of a retaliation claim – the causal connection between his activities protected under the ADEA and the complained-of actions allegedly taken by his supervisor.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Petitioner's Petition for Writ of Certiorari should be denied.

Attorneys for Respondent
Oklahoma Gas and Electric Co.

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF OKLAHOMA

DAVID R. TINKLE, Plaintiff,	)
vs.	)	Case No. CIV-99-1132-P
OKLAHOMA GAS AND ELECTRIC COMPANY, Defendant.	)

DEFENDANT'S REPLY BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Defendant Oklahoma Gas and Electric Company ("OG&E") filed its Motion for Summary Judgment and Brief in Support on April 20, 2000. Plaintiff filed a Response on May 31, 2000. In Plaintiff's Response Brief, Plaintiff raises several issues not previously raised in this matter. Additionally, by way of Affidavit, attached as Exhibit "1" to Plaintiff's Response Brief, Plaintiff's [sic] attempts to create a question of fact by directly contradicting his deposition testimony in several important particulars.

I. PLAINTIFF CANNOT CREATE A QUESTION OF FACT BY OFFERING AFFIDAVIT TESTIMONY THAT DIRECTLY CONTRADICTS HIS DEPOSITION TESTIMONY.

There are several points in Plaintiff's Affidavit that directly contradict his sworn deposition testimony. This attempt by Plaintiff to create a question of fact by contradicting his own testimony must fail.

At page 2 of the Tinkle Affidavit, he states: "I had my deposition taken by Roberta Browning Fields." Mr. Tinkle is referring to the testimony he gave in the Riffel vs. Oklahoma Gas and Electric Company case. The deposition of David Tinkle taken on behalf of the plaintiff on June 6, 1997 in the Riffel vs. Oklahoma Gas and Electric Company case, No. CIV-96-1179-A is attached hereto in its entirety as Exhibit "A." The deposition was taken on behalf of the plaintiff. Mr. Lewis Barber, Jr. asked Mr. Tinkle all of the questions on behalf of his client, plaintiff Don Riffel, and Ms. Fields, attorney for Oklahoma Gas and Electric Company, did not ask one single question of Mr. Tinkle. Mr. Tinkle refers to this previous case and asserts that he was treated differently by his supervisor, John Singleton, after he gave testimony in that case in June of 1997. However, at his deposition in this matter, Plaintiff admitted that his supervisor, John Singleton, had been "out to get him" since 1985. He further admitted that after he testified in the Riffel case, Plaintiff's supervisor, John Singleton, treated him differently in the following manner: "A lot of times when he would tell me to do something, his voice would be raised, and he would be irritable. He was more demanding." Deposition of Plaintiff, attached hereto as Exhibit "B," p. 156. Plaintiff's assertion that he received adverse employment action as a result of his testimony in the previous case is not supported by Plaintiff's own sworn testimony.

In his Affidavit, Plaintiff asserts that John Singleton tried to intentionally injure Plaintiff as a result of the Riffel testimony. As explained more fully in Proposition II of this Brief, the Company, OG&E could not be held liable for this alleged intentional tort of its employee, John Singleton. Intentionally injuring an employee is not part of a supervisor job. If Plaintiff was injured on the job as a result of the negligence of his supervisor, his exclusive remedy would be through the Workers' Compensation Act. See Proposition III. Plaintiff never filed a workers' compensation claim. Plaintiff was injured on August 21, 1997. When Plaintiff filed this suit on August 4, 1999, he still had time to file a workers' compensation claim, but never did.

There is no evidence to support Plaintiff's argument that Mr. Singleton tried to injure him. The uncontroverted evidence is that at the time Mr. Tinkle was re-injured while driving the crane on August 21, 1997 (Exhibit "B," p. 20) Defendant had successfully defended the Riffel vs. OG&E case. See Order on Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment signed July 31, 1997 by Wayne E. Alley, United States District Judge, attached as Exhibit "H" to Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment and Brief in Support. There was no reason at that time to believe Plaintiff Riffel had a case against OG&E. Most importantly, Plaintiff's own admission that driving the crane was part of his job, along with the testimony of his co-workers that they also had driven this crane, establishes that this assignment was part of his job and therefore not retaliatory adverse employment action. See Proposition IV.

At page 4 of his Affidavit, Mr. Tinkle states: "I was further told by my supervisor that he would not allow me to file a workers' compensation claim and that the company was not going to pay any workers' compensation to me." Tinkle Affidavit, p. 4. This statement was contradicted several times in Plaintiff's sworn testimony. Plaintiff Tinkle specifically testified that he was never told by anyone that he could not file a workers' compensation claim. Tinkle Deposition attached hereto as Exhibit "B," Vol. I, p. 18. Plaintiff conceded that he made the decision not to file a workers' compensation claim but to file an insurance claim instead. Exhibit "B," p. 16, (he was not sure it was the Company's fault, so he decided to file medical insurance claims); p. 27 (he never asked anybody about filing a workers' compensation claim); p. 59 (none of Plaintiff's doctors ever concluded that he should have filed a workers' compensation claim). In any event, when this suit was filed on August 4, 1999, there was still time to file a workers' compensation claim for the injury of August 21, 1997. Plaintiff obviously consulted with an attorney to file this suit, but no workers' compensation claim was ever filed. Based on Plaintiff's testimony that he decided to accept medical insurance benefits and the fact that no workers' compensation claim was ever filed, the only reasonable conclusion is that Plaintiff did not intend to file such a claim. Plaintiff certainly cannot argue that he was prevented from filing by OG&E. For several months prior to the expiration of the two year statute of limitations, he was no longer an employee.

At page 5 of his Affidavit, Plaintiff states: "Since my doctor stated that I only had to be on light duty for two weeks, there was absolutely no justification to place me on short term disability and then long term disability." Plaintiff testified at his deposition that his condition never improved, if anything, he was worse, and he admitted he had never ben released to return to his former job at OG&E. Plaintiff ignores or misunderstands the permanent medical restrictions given by his doctor. See Exhibit "12" to Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment and Brief in Support, Corrected Copy filed as a Supplement to Defendant's Brief on May 9, 2000, attached hereto as Exhibit "B-12."[1] On the back of the page, Plaintiff's doctor lists the following medical restrictions:

1. No operating heavy equipment;
2. No repetitive use of hands/wrists/fingers; and
3. No lifting/carrying of greater than 25 pounds.

Exhibit "B-12" and Exhibit "B," pp. 1-15.

Plaintiff admits in his deposition that to date these restrictions have not been lifted. Exhibit "B," pp. 15, 39-40. Plaintiff further admitted that he was never released to return to his job in the Heavy Hauling Department. Exhibit "B," p. 20, Vol. II, p. 40. A second treating physician (Dr. Tipton) gave the opinion as late as March 2, 1998 that Plaintiff was disabled from his own occupation. Exhibit "B," Vol. III, pp. 122-124 and "Attending Physician Statement," attached as Exhibit 32. In May of 1999, when Plaintiff made a request for reinstatement, he admits he had never been released to full duty by his doctor. Exhibit "B," Vol. II, pp. 5-6. Tinkle even admitted to his doctor that he did not believe he could go back to work. Exhibit "B," Vol. I, pp. 43-44. Tinkle admits that not only has he never been released from these medical restrictions, that, if anything, his condition has changed for the worse. Exhibit "B," Vol. II, p. 15. What Plaintiff wanted and still wants is for OG&E to create a job for him that does not currently exist. Exhibit "B," Vol. III, pp. 101, 102, 109, 110. This the Company does not have an obligation to do.

This form attached as Exhibit "B-12," is the medical documentation submitted by Plaintiff and his attorney when Plaintiff wanted to return to work. See Letter of Lewis Barber, jr. [sic], attached as part of Exhibit "B-12." Defendant did not alter this form. Plaintiff's own testimony and the opinion of two other doctors (Tipton and Jones) confirm that Plaintiff was medically unable to return to his job at OG&E.

At page 6 of his Affidavit, Plaintiff accuses the Company of providing "false information to the disability carrier." Plaintiff filled out his own request for disability benefits and accepted those benefits. Exhibit "B," pp. 35-36 and Exhibits 1, 17, 18, 19, 20 and 21. Interestingly, Plaintiff cites no example of false information provided to the carrier. Two of Plaintiff's treating doctors determined that he had permanent restrictions and was unable to return to his job in the Heavy Hauling Department at OG&E. Plaintiff's inability to return to his job was confirmed by the doctor who examined him on behalf of American Fidelity. See the results of the independent medical examination conducted by Dr. Wilson D. Jones, IV, Exhibit "D" to Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment and Brief in Support, Affidavit of Janie McKinney and Exhibit "D-4," ("McKinney Affidavit").

Plaintiff repeatedly refers in his Affidavit to the fact that he was disqualified from disability benefits because of the part time job he had at the car wash. The Affidavit of Janie McKinney, attached as Exhibit "D" to Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment and Brief in Support, makes its [sic] clear that Plaintiff's benefits were terminated because he no longer met the definition of "disabled." Plaintiff's own doctors agreed that he was qualified to work at a job, just not his job in the Heavy Hauling Department of OG&E. Accordingly, since Plaintiff was able to work at a job, he was not considered disabled under the American Fidelity Benefit Plan offered to OG&E employees and purchased by Plaintiff. The job at the car wash confirmed that he was in fact able to work at a job.

At page 7 of Plaintiff's Affidavit, he states:

> My attorney informed me of the fraudulent documents used by OG&E and American Fidelity in processing my claims for disability and, the reasons I was not allowed to file a workers' compensation claim. These revelations led me to the conclusion that trying to pursue the appeal of the action by American Fidelity would be futile.

Plaintiff makes this unsupported assertion in an effort to avoid Defendant's argument that Plaintiff's ERISA claim must be dismissed for Plaintiff's failure to exhaust administrative remedies. Plaintiff does not identify the "fraudulent documents" and does not give any information about what his attorney told him that caused him to fail to pursue an appeal of American Fidelity's action.

These statements are also inconsistent with the actions taken by Plaintiff and his attorney. At Exhibit "D-6" to Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment and Brief in Support, a letter is attached from Janie McKinney, American Fidelity, to Lewis Barber, Jr., attorney for David Tinkle, acknowledging receipt of the letter dated June 5, 1999 on behalf of Mr. Tinkle and asking for "any information that will allow us to understand fully the reasons you feel our decision to terminate benefits beyond 24 months should be reevaluated." The letter from Janie McKinney, AGD Manager, Benefits Department, American Fidelity, goes on to say once information is received, the Appeal Committee would reevaluate the decision and if appropriate schedule an appear [sic] hearing for Mr. Tinkle. After initially inquiring about an appeal, neither Mr. Tinkle nor his attorney supplied any additional information to Janie McKinney. See McKinney Affidavit. Plaintiff David Tinkle's statement in his Affidavit that he determined not to bother with an appeal based [sic] what his attorney told him is inconsistent with their effort to begin an appeal. Like many of the bold, self-serving and unsupported statements in Plaintiff's Affidavit, it is simply not to be believed. Plaintiff has failed to exhaust his administrative remedies.

Self-serving affidavits cannot supersede contradictory sworn testimony given earlier in a deposition. Darnell vs. Target Stores, 16 F.3d 174 (7th Cir. 1993). A party cannot create a question of fact by using an affidavit to contradict previously sworn deposition testimony. Cleveland vs. Policy Management Systems, 526 U.S. 795, 119 S.Ct. 1597 (1999); Colantuoni vs. Alfred Calcagni & Sons, Inc., 44 F.3d 1, 5 (1st Cir. 1994) (affidavit submitted after motion for summary judgment was filed would not be considered where affidavit directly conflicted with plaintiff's deposition testimony and did not explain the reason for the conflict); Hackman vs. Valley Fair, 932 F.2d 239, 241 (3rd Cir. 1991) (affidavit claiming plaintiff had been confused during prior deposition did not create material fact issue precluding summary judgment); Barwick vs. Celotex Corp., 736 F.2d 946, 960 (4th Cir. 1984) (genuine issue of material fact is not created where only issue of fact is to determine which of two conflicting versions of plaintiff's testimony is correct); Albertson vs. T. J. Stevenson & Co., 749 F.2d 223, 228 (5th Cir. 1984) (non-movant cannot defeat a motion for summary judgment by submitting an affidavit which directly contradicts, without explanation, his previous testimony); Davidson & Jones Development Co. vs. Elmore Development Co., 921 F.2d 1343, 1352 (6th Cir. 1991) (after a motion for summary judgment has been filed, thereby testing the resisting party's evidence, a factual issue may not be created by filing an affidavit contradicting earlier deposition testimony); Slowiak vs. Land O' Lakes, Inc., 987 F.2d 1293, 1297 (7th Cir. 1993) (self-serving affidavits without factual support in the record will not defeat a motion for summary judgment); Camfield Tires, Inc. vs. Michelin Tire Corp., 719 F.2d 1361, 1365-66 (8th Cir. 1983) (affidavit directly contrary to deposition testimony did not create a genuine issue as to a material fact so as to preclude summary judgment where the affidavit did not explain the deposition testimony and the earlier deposition testimony did not reflect any confusion that might require explanation); Kennedy vs. Allied Mutual Insurance Co., 952 F.2d 262, 266 (9th Cir. 1991) (party cannot create an issue of fact by an affidavit contradicting his prior deposition testimony if the affidavit is a sham produced merely to avoid summary judgment); Franks vs. Nimmo, 796 F.2d 1230, 1237 (10th Cir. 1986) (court may disregard affidavit conflicting with affiant's prior sworn statements if it concludes that it is merely an attempt to create sham fact issue); Pyramid Securities Ltd. vs. IB Resolution, Inc., 924 F.2d 114, 1123 (C.A.D.C.), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 822, 112 S.Ct. 85, 116

L.Ed.2d 57 (1991) (affiant could not defend summary judgment where it did not contain new evidence, and did not show confusion of lack of access to the facts in prior sworn testimony); and Sinskey vs. Pharmacia Opthalmics, Inc., 982 F.2d 494, 498 (C.A.Fed. 1992), cert. denied.

This effort by Plaintiff to thwart the summary judgment process must fail.

II. PLAINTIFF DOES NOT HAVE A CLAIM OF INTENTIONAL INJURY AGAINST OG&E.

In Plaintiff's Response Brief and in the Affidavit of David Tinkle attached as Exhibit "1" to Plaintiff's Response Brief, Plaintiff argues that his supervisor, John Singleton, intentionally injured him. "Singleton calculated, schemed, and planned to harm and place me in a dangerous position." Affidavit of David Tinkle, p. 7, attached as Exhibit "1" to Plaintiff's Response Brief ("Tinkle Affidavit"). "At the time, Singleton ordered me to drive the 75 Ton Road Crane from Ardmore, he was fully aware of my back and neck ailments; that my body size (6' 2") was too large for the cabin of the Road Crane and, with my 'hard-hat' on, my head was touching the roof of the cabin." Tinkle Affidavit, p. 8. "In the course of driving the Road Crane from Ardmore, my head was constantly hitting the roof of the cabin, and on one instance my head hit the roof with such force that I sustained further injury to my neck." Tinkle Affidavit, p. 4.

In Plaintiff's Complaint, attached hereto as Exhibit "C," Plaintiff attempts to state a claim for intentional or negligent infliction of mental and/or emotional distress, but makes no allegation of intentional injury. With the contentions in Plaintiff's Response Brief and Affidavit, it appears that he is attempting to assert that his supervisor, John Singleton, "calculated, schemed, and planned" to intentionally injure him. If Plaintiff had such a claim, it would not be against his former employer, OG&E, but against John Singleton. Plaintiff cannot state a claim for intentional injury against OG&E. The general rule is that an agent's tortious or criminal assault on a third party cannot be considered within the scope of the agent's authority, unless the assault could have been "anticipated by the employer" as a foreseeable means of accomplishing the job for which the agent was employed. Clark vs. Brien, 59 F.3d 1082, 1987 (10th Cir. 1995), citing Allison vs. Gilmore, Gardner & Kirk, Inc., 350 P.2d 287, 290-92 (Okla. 1960). In Allison the Court held the employer not liable when an employee got into a fight with a third party who challenged the way the employee was doing his job. See also Tulsa General Drivers Union vs. Conley, 288 P.2d 750, 753 (Okla. 1985) ("it is not, as a general rule, within the scope of the servant's employment to commit an assault upon a third person and the master is not liable for such an assault, though committed while the servant was about his master's business"). Here, even assuming for the purpose of this Motion that Plaintiff's supervisor, John Singleton, intended to injure him, there is no evidence that such an assault was "anticipated by the employer" as a foreseeable means of accomplishing his job as supervisor. Such a claim against OG&E must be dismissed.

III. A CLAIM FOR NEGLIGENT INJURY WOULD BE BARRED BY THE WORKERS' COMPENSATION ACT.

If Plaintiff was injured as a result of his supervisor's negligence in assigning him to drive the crane, then OG&E's liability could only be under the Workers' Compensation statutes. For an employee injured on the job as a result of a supervisor's negligence, the Workers' Compensation statutes provide the exclusive remedy. Title 85, § 12 of the Oklahoma Statutes. Section 12 provides as follows:

> The liability prescribed in Section 11 of this title shall be exclusive and in place of all other liability of the employer and any of his employees . . . , at common law or otherwise, for such injury, loss of services, or death, to the employee . . . .

Section 11 of Title 85 provides:

> Every employer subject to the provisions of the Workers' Compensation Act shall pay, or provide as required by the Workers' Compensation Act, compensation according to the schedules of the Workers' Compensation Act for the disability or death of his employee resulting from an accidental or personal injury sustained by the employee arising out of and in the course of his employment, without regard to fault as a cause of such injury,. . . .

Plaintiff never filed a workers' compensation claim. He testified that he made a decision not to file a workers' compensation claim. Plaintiff contends he was injured August 21, 1997. This suit was filed August 4, 1999. At that time, Plaintiff was still within the two year statute of limitations and could have filed a workers' compensation claim in addition to or in lieu of this action. 85 O.S. § 43. Given Plaintiff's previous testimony that he decided not to file a workers' compensation claim and the fact that he consulted a lawyer well before the two year statute of limitations ran out, the only logical conclusion is that Plaintiff made a decision not to file a workers' compensation claim. If [sic] any event, any liability for negligently injuring Plaintiff would be under the Workers' Compensation statutes.

IV. THE EVIDENCE DOES NOT SUPPORT PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM HE WAS ASSIGNED TO DRIVE THE CRANE IN RETALIATION FOR HIS TESTIMONY.

Plaintiff argues finally that he was given the job assignment to drive the 75-ton crane as a result of his testimony in the Riffel case. This argument must similarly fail. Plaintiff admits that he had previously driven the 75-ton crane. Exhibit "B," Vol. II, pp. 65-66. So have other employees. There is a difference between operating and driving the crane. There are two separate cabs on this large crane. One is used when someone is operating the crane and the other is used when someone is driving the crane. Don Riffel testified that he has previously driven (not operated) the 75-ton crane. Deposition of Don Riffel taken June 27, 2000, to be supplied when transcribed as Exhibit "D." Charles Wilson, a retired employee, gave an Affidavit that is attached as Exhibit "3" to Plaintiff's Response to Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment and Brief in Support. In his Affidavit, Mr. Wilson states he has previously driven the 75-ton crane. Glen Chartney and Ray Rigsby have testified that they have previously driven the 75-ton crane. Deposition of Glen Chartney, to be transcribed and supplied as Exhibit "E"; Deposition of Ray Rigsby to be transcribed and supplied as Exhibit "F." Even Tinkle admits that he had been previously assigned to drive the 75-ton crane. Exhibit "B," Vol. I, p. 38. Although not a favorite job assignment of any of the employees, driving the 75-ton crane was something most, if not all the employees in the Heavy Hauling Department had previously done.[2] It was part of David Tinkle's job to drive the crane. Exhibit "B," Vol. I, pp. 33-36, 42. Before the crane incident, Plaintiff's doctor had released him to drive and operate heavy equipment. Exhibit "B," Vol. I, pp. 43-44 and Vol. II, p. 80. He was released to full duty at the time he was asked to drive the crane back from Ardmore. Given the fact that it was part of Plaintiff's job duties to drive this 75-ton crane, he cannot now complain that this job assignment was given solely as a result of his testimony in the Riffel case.

At page 4 of Plaintiff's Brief, Plaintiff contends "in fear of aggravating or re-injuring his neck and back, Tinkle begged of Singleton to reconsider his order, and Singleton refused." Plaintiff offers his Affidavit, attached as Exhibit 1, as support for this statement. Again, Plaintiff's deposition testimony contradicts his Affidavit.

[2] Tinkle testified there were nine to ten people in the Heavy Hauling Department. Exhibit "B," Vol. I, p. 35. Wilson, Rigsby, Tinkle and Riffel have admitted driving the crane. Rigsby testified that Narry, Brakehill and Sitton have driven the crane. Exhibit "F," pp. ___.

Plaintiff testified he told his supervisor, John Singleton, he did not need to be in the crane because he knew how to drive. John Singleton responded that everybody needed to be able to drive the crane and do all the work that was required. Plaintiff did not tell his supervisor that he felt he did not need to be in it because of his medical condition. Plaintiff never said to his supervisor, "I'm afraid I'm going to get hurt if I drive the crane." Exhibit "B," Vol. II, pp. 52-53.

OG&E denies that its employee John Singleton set in motion a plan to intentionally or negligently injury [sic] Plaintiff. However, even if Mr. Singleton's negligence resulted in an on-the-job injury to Plaintiff, his exclusive remedy would be in the Workers' Compensation Court. If Mr. Singleton's intentional acts caused the injury to Plaintiff, such action by Mr. Singleton would be outside of his employment and Plaintiff's action would be against Mr. Singleton, not OG&E. The same would hold for an intentional attempt by Mr. Singleton to injury [sic] Plaintiff. Under no circumstance would Plaintiff have a cause of action against OG&E based on an allegation that Mr. Singleton negligently or intentionally injured Plaintiff. The evidence also does not support Plaintiff's claim that he was assigned to drive the crane in retaliation for his testimony.

CONCLUSION

Plaintiff's sham affidavit does not created [sic] a genuine issue of material fact that would defeat Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment. Defendant's Motion should be granted.

[16] A. I had a compressed disc which was pressing the nerve, and they went in and scraped the disc to relieve the pressure.

Q. Who did that surgery?

A. I believe it was Dr. Stough.

Q. S-t-o-w?

A. S-t-o-u-g-h, I think.

Q. Okay. What were you told was the cause of the '85 back surgery?

A. He didn't say.

Q. Did you ask anybody?

A. No. The problem came up gradually over a period of time until the pain got so painful I just had to go to the doctor.

Q. Was there any kind of accident or injury that caused that back problem?

A. I felt the problem was part of it on my job, working it daily, the lifting and other odds and ends that I did throughout the day. And I took, instead of saying it was the company's fault, that I wasn't sure. I just went on sick leave and went through the insurance.

Q. So instead of filing a workers' compensation claim, you used up sick leave and used the company medical insurance?

A. Right.

[18] your back?

A. No.

Q. What about the neck surgery in '97? What was that surgery for?

A. A ruptured disc in my neck.

Q. What caused that ruptured disc in your neck, if you know?

A. Dr. Schimandle told me it was due to driving the semis and the bouncing and jarring that occurs from doing my job.

Q. Did you ever file a workers' compensation claim for that neck surgery?

A. No.

Q. Did you do the same thing, take sick leave and use the medical insurance that you had?

A. Yes.

Q. Why didn't you ever file a comp claim for the '97 neck surgery?

A. I didn't want to make waves.

Q. Did anybody ever tell you not to file a comp claim?

A. No.

Q. When was the neck surgery in '97? What month, do you remember?

A. I'm not sure of the date. I have it – it's

* * *

[27] Is that the Dr. S?

A. Schimandle.

Q. Schimandle? Did you talk to your doctor about filing a workers' compensation claim?

A. No.

Q. Why not?

A. I didn't want to cause waves.

Q. Did you even ask anybody about filing a workers' compensation claim?

A. No.

Q. Did you think that you had fully recovered from that March '97 neck surgery when you went back to work?

A. No.

Q. Did you, when your doctor released you to go back to work after that March '97 injury, did you disagree with his decision to release you to go back to work?

A. No.

Q. Was there a period after that March of '97 surgery where you were on light duty?

A. Yes.

Q. How long were you on light duty?

A. Two days.

Q. What did you do on light duty?

A. I answered the phone and radio and filed

* * *

[42] A. Schimandle.

Q. What did he say?

A. He said – I told him what happened and he said, "What is wrong with that man?" Referring to John Singleton. "He shouldn't have put you in that crane."

Q. Is this a conversation that you taped?

A. No.

Q. When you were instructed to drive the crane that day, did you refuse or tell John that you didn't think it would be good for you?

A. I told John that I didn't think I should be in it; that I knew how to run it. And he said, "You need the experience and you're going to drive it." And I said, "I know how to drive it." He said, "You're being paid top pay to do everything. You will drive it back from Ardmore."

Q. Driving a crane was part of your job at that time, right?

A. That's part of everybody's job, to know how, with exceptions.

Q. Well, but it was part of your job to do it?

A. Yes.

Q. If the doctor didn't want you driving a crane, do you know why he didn't put that as a restriction for your job?

[43] A. After the incident he did.

Q. Well, but if he didn't want you driving a crane, why didn't he put that as a restriction before the incident?

A. I have no idea what the doctor thinks or says before.

Q. I understand, but as part of the doctor releasing you to go back to work, did you discuss with your doctor what some of your job duties were?

A. At that time, no. He knew what my job requirements were from the past.

Q. Is that information that you had given the doctor?

A. Yes.

Q. What information did you give this doctor about your job duties?

A. I told him that my main job was driving a semi, hauling heavy equipment. At times I had to operate the cranes, the dozers, besides just loading and unloading.

Q. And what was your doctor's response?

A. He said that I could not continue very much longer hauling and driving the semis and operating heavy equipment.

Q. Did he release you then to drive that equipment?

[44] A. Yes.

Q. So why did he do that? Was he telling you it was okay for now but you might not be able to do it forever? What was he saying?

A. Basically, yes.

Q. On the one tape that I listened to the doctor is asking you if you feel like you can go back to work, and you say, "No, I don't believe I can." And he said, "Then, fine, I'm not going to release you to go back to work." Do you remember that conversation with your doctor? This is after the reinjury.

A. Yes.

Q. Was it your doctor's practice to ask you how you felt, if you were ready to go back, if you could go back?

A. I don't know what is customary for what doctors' opinions are.

Q. I know, but how did he treat you? From the one tape I heard it sounded like he was the kind of doctor that was relying, at least in part, on how you were reporting that you felt, is that correct?

A. He did ask me what I thought, and I was basing my judgment on what he had told me previously. Do you think – well, I'm mixed up now.

Q. We're talking about two different time

[5] about August 1, 1997. Do you see that? There it is, august [sic] 1, 1997. Is that a correct statement? Is that when you went on disability leave?

A. Yes.

Q. And the rest of the sentence said, Denied Plaintiff's request for reinstatement on or about May 24, 1999. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Who did you make that request for reinstatement to?

A. OG&E.

Q. What name? What person? Who did you contact at OG&E?

A. I'm not sure who it was.

Q. Was it by letter or by phone call?

A. It was by letter.

Q. Did you write to a man or a woman, or do you remember?

A. I don't remember.

Q. What was your understanding about why you couldn't come back to work?

A. Because there was no light duty that I could perform.

Q. At that time, in May of 1999, had you been released to full duty by your doctor?

[6] A. No.

Q. Let me hand you what's been marked as Exhibit 9.

(Defendant's Exhibit No. 9 marked.)

Q. And I'll ask you if you received a copy or if you remember receiving a copy of this memo?

A. I remember a letter, but the letter I received, that I remember on this here, was from American Fidelity requesting Social Security denial or approval.

Q. This form, it sounds to me, is from a person at OG&E telling you that you've been gone long enough that you are eligible for long-term disability benefits, but you have to apply. Is that what you understood?

A. This here says applying for Social Security. I don't remember –

Q. That's the second paragraph. In the first paragraph –

A. Oh, in the first paragraph? I can't say for sure or not that I got anything from this first paragraph.

Q. Okay. Now, we already looked at Exhibit 1. Is that a form that you filled out?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that your signature at the bottom?

A. Yes.

Q. And was that a form that you filled out –

* * *

[12] off and on, mostly to get what reports I could get from him.

Q. Is he still practicing medicine?

A. As far as I know he's not practicing at this time. He's supposed to send me a letter documenting all my medical results, tests, all my MRI's, all my past history, and he's so far refused to send one after he's been paid.

Q. Do you know why he's not practicing?

A. Something to do about the medical board.

Q. Okay. Someone told me he had been disciplined or something had happened, but I didn't know the story, and I wondered if you did.

Let me hand you what's been marked as Exhibit 12.

(Defendant's Exhibit No. 12 marked.)

Q. I'm going to mark – there's no writing where I'm marking, is there?

A. No.

Q. Because this page – and it's a front and back form, too. Now, this is called a Medical Status Report, right?

A. Yes.

Q. And you've signed up at the top giving the doctor permission to send out this report, right?

A. Yes.

[13] Q. Now, this was Dr. –

A. Schimandle.

Q. Okay. And the date you signed it is April 5 of '99, correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And that looks like the same date the doctor signed it, doesn't it?

A. No.

Q. Well, there's the doctor's signature and there's the date.

A. Oh.

Q. And that's the date that you signed it.

A. Oh, I was looking up here. I was misreading.

Q. It's easy to do on these forms.

And this is the form where he says you can come back but you've got restrictions, right?

A. Come back with restrictions, yes.

Q. And on the back of Page 1 is where the doctor has listed your restrictions, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And he said that, what, you can't lift or carry more than 25 pounds?

A. Yes.

Q. And you can't have repetitive use of your hands, wrists or fingers?

[14] A. Yes.

Q. And you can't operate heavy equipment?

A. Yes.

Q. Are there any other restrictions that you see on the form or that you remember he told you about?

A. There's other restrictions. No driving the semis. There's others that I've seen in there that are not on here.

Q. And it may be that when – I don't know what he was thinking, but when he said "no operating heavy equipment," he may have been referring to no semis, no cranes. I don't know what he meant.

A. Could very well have been.

Q. But you do remember him discussing with you that you shouldn't drive the semi trucks?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, the second page of this Exhibit 12 is a letter to Belleva Johnson at OG&E, and it's from your lawyer, Lewis Barber. And is that your signature on the second page of Exhibit 12?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you see this letter before it went out to OG&E?

A. Yes.

Q. When you sent this letter with this Medical [15] Status Report that's Exhibit 12 to OG&E, was this the most current Medical Status Report that you had?

A. I don't know.

Q. Well, I guess what I'm trying – did you have any more current or recent or different medical information that you sent to OG&E? Maybe a better way to ask it is, don't focus on the dates, but did you ever have a Medical Status Report that you gave to OG&E that released you from these restrictions?

A. No.

Q. So whether the date is correct or not, this form contains the most current medical report about you, right?

A. I don't know.

Q. Well, has anything changed? Can you lift 50 pounds? Can you operate the heavy equipment?

A. No.

Q. So has anything changed? Has your condition changed from this Medical Status Report, in your opinion?

A. My condition has changed somewhat.

Q. For better or for worse?

A. Worse.

Q. Let me hand you what's been marked – you know anytime you need a break, you just need to ask, right?

A. Yes.

* * *

[65] Q. Now, you told me before that you had operated the crane pretty regularly as part of your job, right?

A. Not the 75-ton crane.

Q. You operated cranes routinely as part of your job, right?

A. Yes.

Q. And you had driven one out on the highway once before coming from, what, Shawnee back to Oklahoma City?

A. Yes. No, it was to Shawnee from Oklahoma City.

Q. Okay. You drove one to Shawnee?

A. A 75-ton crane.

Q. The same one?

A. Yes.

Q. When was it that you drove the 75-ton crane from Oklahoma City to Shawnee?

A. I'm not sure of the date.

Q. Was it before or after your neck surgery?

A. Before.

Q. Did you have a problem that day driving that crane?

A. Yes.

Q. What was the problem that you had?

A. Keeping it on the road, bouncing hard, [66] jarring, some minor shifting.

Q. I guess what I'm wondering is, do you feel like you got injured when you drove it from Oklahoma City to Shawnee?

A. No.

Q. Why were you able to drive it that first time without getting injured?

A. Part of it, the road was a little smoother; it wasn't as far; drove it slower.

Q. Did John give you that assignment, driving the 75-ton crane from Oklahoma City to Shawnee?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you report to him when you got back from that job about the job?

A. I don't follow.

Q. Well, when you drove it from Oklahoma City to Shawnee, when you got back to work that day, did you tell him, John, I had a hard time, I couldn't do it, don't ever give me that job again, or I was able to do it? Did you give him any information about that job?

A. No.

Q. Okay. Ray Pierce, you can't think of anything specific about him except he would have been around when different things were said and happened?

A. Yes.

* * *

[80] Q. So he was your supervisor on the day you were injured?

A. Yes.

Q. Of that project?

A. Yes. He made a statement to me, along with Rick Brakebill, that John was showing his authority, that John knew I shouldn't have been in the crane; he knows my medical condition. And if I wanted to, Rick could drive the crane most of the way back. And I told them both, I says, I appreciate the offer, but if John found out that I didn't drive the crane all the way back, I would be in trouble.

Q. So you declined?

A. I declined their help because I didn't want them to get in trouble and I didn't want to get into more trouble. And if John found out, they would be in trouble.

Q. Now, at the time, we talked about this before, at the time John asked you to drive the crane back, did you have any medical restrictions in place that said you shouldn't operate or drive the crane?

A. No.

Q. Is there anything else you can think of that Craig might be able to testify to?

A. Nothing that hasn't already been said.

Q. I know a lot of these people are involved in [101] that you could do with your restrictions?

A. There's a lot of jobs I could do in the company with my restrictions.

Q. For example?

A. They have security guard positions, they have safety officers that drive pickups or cars.

Q. Did you ever apply for a security guard position?

A. No.

Q. Do you know if there were any of those positions open at the time you were wanting to come back?

A. No, I do not know if there's any open.

Q. Did you apply for any other jobs at OG&E, other than your request to be reinstated to the job that you had?

A. No.

Q. Why not?

A. I was letting my attorney handle all of my affairs, according to what's going on.

Q. Did you ever talk to anybody at OG&E about coming back to a different job, not your old job, but coming back to a different job?

A. No. Yes. I take that back.

Q. Who was it?

[102] A. John Singleton.

Q. And when was it?

A. I'm not sure. It was after I was put on disability, John Singleton called me up and said they were looking for a position that I could do. And he never returned the call.

Q. Did you call him back?

A. No. He said he would be in touch.

Q. John Singleton called you?

A. Yes.

Q. And said he was looking for a position that you could do?

A. Yes.

Q. With your restrictions?

A. Yes.

Q. Was it after you went on long-term disability?

A. I'm not sure if it was on a short-term or a long-term.

Q. And you never called him back and he never called you back?

A. Nope.

Q. Why didn't you call him back?

A. I believed if he had something, he would contact me.

WHERE IS MR. SINGLETON?

Nowhere in the record has Mr. Singleton denied any of the evidence brought forth by Tinkle. Nowhere in the record has Mr. Singleton denied the evidence set forth in affidavits by Kenneth LaRue, Charles Wilson, Don Riffel — all of whom were assigned to the Heavy Hauling Equipment Unit under Singleton's supervision. The evidence produced by these men who were supervised by Singleton established facts that supported Tinkle's "prima facie case" of discrimination and retaliation. The evidence showed: the availability of "light duty" jobs and that others similarly situated were afforded "light duty" assignments for extended time periods; the presence of "air-ride suspension trucks" in the Employer's inventory; that the 75 Ton Road Crane was a very difficult piece of equipment to drive and presented an extremely rough ride when driven on the highways, inter alia. All of this evidence was unrebuked — where is Mr. Singleton? A "prima facie case" is one that ". . . will suffice until contradicted and overcome by other evidence". "A litigating party is said to have a prima facie case when the evidence in his favor is sufficiently strong for his opponent to be called on to answer it". Black's Law Dictionary, 4th Ed. (1968); Reeves at 149.

The Respondent Employer is still trying to overpower sound reasoning and a "complete review of the record" by extracting selected portions of the record that reflect some of Tinkle's statements — while at the same time "hiding the evil hand" of Singleton. Examples of each such extractions could be shown but for brevity of this reply, only a few are provided. During his deposition, Tinkle answered the questions that were propounded to him. When asked if he had ever driven the 75 Ton Crane prior to injuring his neck on August 21, 1997, the following was stated at page 38, lines 7-11 of the deposition transcript taken on 2-21-00:

> 7 Q. So you were driving the crane from Ardmore
>
> 8 back to South High?
>
> 9 A. Yes.
>
> 10 Q. Had you ever done anything like that before?
> 11 A. I have drove it once before.

Emphasis ours. The only pertinent question raised in the deposition was whether Tinkle had driven the crane before, which he answered that he had driven it "once before". In this vein, a jury could find that prior to Tinkle testifying in the Riffel case, driving the Road Crane was not part of his normal duties.

In his affidavit at para. #20, Tinkle said:

> Even after I was able to return to work and resume my normal duties (after two weeks, approximately the first or second week of September, 1997), Singleton took the position that I had to return "100 per cent" — meaning that I had to perform all possible duty assignments, including driving the 75 Ton Road Crane. Again, in nearly twenty (20) years of service with OG&E, on August 21, 1997, I had driven the 75 Ton Road Crane only one other time, and curiously, after only about two months after testifying for Mr. Riffel, driving the Road Crane then became part of my job duties. Emphasis ours.

In his deposition taken on 2-21-00 at page 42, Lines 8-16, the following questions and responses were given:

Q. When you were instructed to drive the crane that day, did you refuse or tell John that you didn't think it would be good for you?

A. I told John that I didn't think I should be in it; that I knew how to run it. And he said, "You need the experience and you're going to drive it." And I said, "I know how to drive it." He said, "You're being paid top pay to do everything. You will drive it back from Ardmore."

Emphasis ours.

In his affidavit at para. #5, Tinkle stated:

> When Singleton ordered me to drive the crane from Ardmore, the regular crane operators, Rick Breakbill and Mike Neary were both on duty and available to drive the Road Crane. I begged John Singleton to not make me drive the 75 Ton Road Crane back from Ardmore, and in doing so, I re-emphasized that due to my back and neck injuries that I did not believe I could handle the assignment. Singleton said to me "you will drive it, that's it and I don't want to hear anymore about it". Breakbill was standing there when I was talking to Singleton about not wanting to drive the 75 Ton Road Crane. Breakbill was assigned by Singleton to serve as an escort for me; however, Breakbill told me that I should not be in the Road Crane and offered to drive it in spite of Singletons order. Because of the testimony that I had given in the Riffel case, I was fearful that Singleton would take disciplinary action against me if I failed to follow his order of driving the Road Crane. I declined Breakbill's offer to drive the crane from Ardmore.

Emphasis ours.

Breakbill was not only a witness to this conversation but was listed as a witness to be called at trial. The district court should have resorted to legal principles of "construction" — thereby "applying the probable aim and purpose of the provision". Black's Law Dictionary, 4th Ed. (1968). From the evidence, a reasonable jury could find that Tinkle did explain to Singleton the reasons for not wanting to drive the Road Crane. Even if Tinkle did not explain with particularity the reason for not wanting to drive the 75 Ton Road Crane, there is no evidence offered by Singleton denying Tinkle's assertions. Applying the principles of Reeves at 149, there is no need for Tinkle to produce "additional evidence" beyond his "prima facie case". Ergo, applying the "common sense" principles in Oncale, Singleton knew or should have known that Tinkle's physical problems would pose not only a danger to himself in driving the Road Crane for 80 miles on interstate highway, but also created a dangerous condition to other motorists. As such, a jury could decide that Singleton (supervisor) was charged with "knowledge" of Tinkle's: (1) neck surgery and recent return to work; (2) his prior back surgeries and other surgeries while under Singleton's supervision; (3) that he had only driven the Road Crane one (1) other time, and that was after he testified in opposition to Singleton and OG&E in the Riffel case; (4) the cabin of the Road Crane was very small and compact, and Tinkle's body size (6'2") was too large to allow for adequate space in driving the crane, his head striking the roof with every hard bump and re-injuring his neck; (5) that the normal Road Crane operators who were assigned to drive the crane were present and available to drive it when Singleton ordered Tinkle to drive the crane a distance of 80 miles on interstate highway; (6) that driving the 75 Ton Road Crane became a part of Tinkle's normal duties only after he testified in the Riffel case; and (7) that the supervisor would not allow him to return to work unless he was 100 percent able to operate and drive all heavy hauling equipment, including the 75 Ton Road Crane. Such findings support a claim of retaliation, and a substantial change in terms and conditions of his employment. Where is Mr. Singleton?

On August 21, 1997, Tinkle re-injured his neck and thereafter his doctor immediately placed him on a 2-week "light duty" schedule.[1] OG&E's retaliatory action of failing to provide Tinkle "light duty" when it was available, raises a genuine question of disputed fact.[2] Also, this act by the Employer raises the question of "bad faith" being the cause of Tinkle being placed on "short term" and "long term" disability for he was certainly capable of performing various available "light duty" assignments.[3] Even after his re-injury, he still could have performed all duty assignments had he been assigned to a truck with air-ride-suspension.[4]

1. See letter from Tinkle's doctor (App. pg.1) *[This document was submitted below at Appendix to Appellant's Opening Brief in the Circuit Court at page 209 (location of document in record below hereinafter 10th App].

2. Tinkle offered evidence below by naming the various "light duty" jobs that were available. Evidence was also produced through affidavits of three others who worked in the same Heavy Hauling Equipment Unit. These documents were part of the 10th App. at pages 190-205, inclusively.

3. Tinkle was placed on short-term disability by Singleton, rather than allow him to return to work. Tinkle's deposition (2-21-00) at pg. 46, lines 16-19:

16 A. But I wasn't told or asked — I wasn't asked

17 to be put on short term or long term. John Singleton said

18 we're putting you on short term and long term and Robin

19 will fill out the paperwork.

4. Trucks equipped with air-ride-suspension were available and part of the inventory of the Employer, and this point has been amply addressed in the Pet. at pg. 2-3.

Throughout It's brief, the Employer craftily relates events to inapplicable time periods; makes general and conclusive arguments without benefit of established facts, or without specifically identifying the fact(s) in support of the argument. Example, on page "1" of the brief, the Employer states: "On August 21, 1997, after returning to work with no medical restrictions, Petitioner re-injured his neck. . . ." (Emphasis ours). To the "reader", a conclusion is drawn that Tinkle returned to work on or about August 21, 1997, without any medical restrictions, and suffered a re-injury to his neck . Such a conclusion is erroneously reached by craftily relating a condition ("no medical restrictions") and the event to an inapplicable time period, as well as not disclosing that Tinkle was still recuperating from his neck surgery. The truth of the matter is: (1) After his neck surgery in March, 1997, Tinkle returned to work on April 28, 1997. Pet. pg. 2; (2) he was still taking off from work to keep doctor's appointments regarding his neck surgery when ordered by his supervisor to drive the 75 Ton Road Crane on August 21, 1997;[5] (3) Tinkle's supervisor knew that he was taking off from work to see the doctor regarding his recuperation from neck surgery;[6] (4) driving the 75 Ton Road Crane was not one of Tinkle's normal work assignments, as in his twenty (20) years of employment with the Employer, he had only driven the 75 Ton Crane just on one (1) other occasion;[7] (5) the supervisor knew the danger and risk involved in assigning Tinkle to drive the 75 Ton Road Crane. (Pet. 4,5).

6. App. 1. Also, Tinkle's affidavit para.16, 10th App. 197, reads:

> At the time, Singleton ordered me to drive the 75 Ton Road Crane from Ardmore, he was fully aware of my back and neck ailments; that my body size (6' 2") was too large for the cabin of the Road Crane and, with my "hard-hat" on, my head was touching the roof of the cabin.

The Employer's primary challenge is not focused on the facts that give rise to the application of the "standard", but challenges the precedent cases decided by this Honorable Court as not being raised below. First, the sufficiency of the evidence to support a "prima facie case" must be considered. The cited precedent cases establishes the ambit for housing the "appropriate standards". Oncale at 81. Its putting the "cart before the horse" to consider the "standards" before consideration of the evidence. The Courts below failed to properly consider the evidence. Below, Tinkle presented evidence in support of a "prima facie case", to wit: (1) he engaged in the "protected activity" (Riffel v. OG&E); (2) shortly thereafter he was subjected to intensified adverse employment actions; (3) that others similarly situated were not so treated.[8] Both lower courts addressed the evidence offered in support of the "prima facie" case, but applied the wrong standard.[9] The Employer raises the principles of "hostile work" environment being raised for the first time as a "second element of the retaliation claim". In this presentation the Employer relies on the precise legal wording contained in the briefs rather than the evidence offered in support of the claim. This sort of tunnel vision is precisely

7. This point was covered in the Petition (Pet. at pg. 4-5) and will be addressed just briefly below.

8. Tinkle's prima facie case argument appears, passim, in the Petition for Writ

9. Tinkle amply covered the misapplications by the courts below at pages 20-21 in the Petition for Writ of Certiorari.

what Ellerth at 753-754 and the cited companion cases clearly prohibited. Conversely, courts are directed to look at all of the evidence and to consider the totality of circumstances. Oncale, id. In this regard, what might be "abusive" in one case, may not be deemed to be "abusive" in another. Oncale, id. The facts below established that Tinkle was recuperating from neck surgery, and was still seeing his doctor, and that the supervisor intentionally subjected him to unnecessary danger and harm by altering the terms and conditions of his employment.[10]

The Employer attempts to avoid liability on the "retaliation" claim by asserting that Tinkle failed to prove that the supervisor, Singleton, had "knowledge" of Tinkle's prior EEO activity in the Riffel case (a question for the jury, for the Employer has acquiesced by not, in any manner, denying "knowledge"). The record is void of any statement or comment from the supervisor that he lacked "knowledge" of Tinkle's prior involvement in the "protected activity". As such, it is reasonable to believe that a supervisor is kept informed of absentees, illnesses and the general, physical and mental fitness of the men/women under his/her supervision. The evidence below shows, inter alia, that when Tinkle testified in the Riffel case in opposition to the Employer, Singleton was the supervisor for both Tinkle and Riffel.[11] OG&E was sued in the Riffel case for age discrimination. Certainly, one who is involved in litigation

10. Alteration of "terms and conditions" appears, passim, in the Petition of Writ of Certiorari.

11. Tinkle refused to meet with OG&E's lawyer during the Riffel case, and his testimony was what the appeals court found as, "smoking gun", direct evidence in support of age discrimination, and reversed the district court's decision granting summary judgment. Pet. at 4.

should know when judgment is rendered and the probable reason(s) therefore. As such, the argument of "impermissible advisory opinion" is not applicable for reason that the "standard" applied is at issue — not the "ultimate outcome" of the case. The Employer relies in error on United States v. Fruehauf, 365 U.S. 146, 157 (1961). The facts in Fruehauf are indeed distinguishable and inapplicable to the case at bar. The Court in Fruehauf was faced with a perplexed dilemma of not being able to determine "issues which remain unfocused because they are not pressed before the court with that clear concreteness provided when a question emerges precisely framed and necessary for decision from a clash of adversary argument exploring every aspect of a multi-faced situation embracing conflicting and demanding interests. . . ." Clearly this case is 180 degrees out of phase with the holding in Fruehauf. The other case cited by the Employer is Secretary of Agriculture v. Central Roig Refining Co., 338 U.S. 604, 619-20 (1950), and there are no issues that can be in any manner related to the case at bar, as a question of "standing" was raised that was not probative and had not been previously raised. A cursory review of this case shows evidence that was not considered, and the misapplication of "standards" promulgated by this honorable court. The courts below had all of the evidence in front of them but failed to apply the proper standard, and committed plain error in failing to consider evidence crucial to Tinkle's retaliation claim.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

Re: David Tinkle
SSN 441-54-2197

August 26, 1997

Dear Mr. Singleton:

Mr. Tinkle was evaluated in my office yesterday for complaints of neck and left arm pain. He states that he was driving from Ardmore in a road crane on 8/21/97 and struck his head on the inside of the crane. He was recovering well from his neck fusion until this incident and now complains of aching neck/left arm pain with intermittent numbness in the arm. My examination did not reveal any significant abnormal findings and I have recommended the he engage in only light duty employment for the next two weeks until his symptoms resolve. I anticipate that he will be able to eventually resume his normal job activities.

Please let me know if I can provide you with any further information.

Sincerely,

Jeffrey H. Schimandle, M.D.
